"Indeed I do," he exclaimed, slapping one of his spread-out knees and leaning toward me. "I know you in the best kind of a way. I have one of your pictures. Now, don't go and say you are not the artist, Henry G. Ashmead."

"I am that man," I replied.

"I didn't doubt it," said the Major, leaning back in his chair, "you look like it. I am a bachelor, sir, and it takes a good deal to keep that sort of a man content and easy in his mind. Pictures and books help a lot in that way, and I make it a point every year to buy a good picture. I got one of yours last fall and am very fond of looking at it. Come with me and I'll show it to you."

The Major then proceeded to a medium-sized room in the front of the house, which he called his reading room.

"It isn't a study," said he, "for I never study, and it isn't a library, for it hasn't books enough for that, but it is as good a room to read in as I know. A fine light, and always cool in summer—there is the picture," and he held up a lamp before one of my large landscapes.

"I thought Burnet owned that!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, he did, but he's been hard up lately, and had to sell off part of his collection. I snapped up that as soon as I saw it. There are things in that picture that you seldom see in paintings. That's timothy grass in that meadow, and a cut about the end of June would make hay worth about $20 a ton. It's ready to cut now," said he, "and from the looks of the leaves on the trees, and the size of those mullein plants, I should say it was in June that you took it."

"I made my studies in June," I said.

"Good," he cried; "I knew it. There is no nonsense about that meadow, such as you would see in most pictures. No bushes and struggling briars, or patches of red clover and orchard grass. I am a straightforward and practical man, and I like a straightforward and practical picture. Of course you couldn't help the daisies, and no more can I in my own meadows."

"Now, then," said he, when we were again before the fire, "you can see for yourself how I know you, and I can tell you that it delights me to have in my house the man who painted that picture. After a while I'll brew a bowl of regent's punch. But it isn't late enough for that. We'll have a bachelar night of it. By next Christmas I suppose the young lady will put a veto on bachelor nights."

"Veto" said I. "What do you mean?"

"You will surely be married by next Christmas," he replied.

"Married!" I exclaimed with a laugh, "we have never thought of being married."

The Major took his cigar from his mouth, put his hands upon his knees, leaned forward and looked at me.

"Do you mean to say, sir, that you and Miss Weldon are not engaged to be married?"

"Not at all," said I. "We have known each other a long time, but we are friends and nothing more."

"Well, I'll be hanged!" cried Major Pendallas, throwing away his cigar and rising abruptly from his chair. Then standing with his back to the fire he looked down upon me.

"How I am disappointed. I surely thought you two were a team, and a fine one. I had made up my mind to it, and now I am set back. I feel as if I were driving a big Percheron and a polo pony. I'm a practical, common-sense man, and I don't mind asking practical, common-sense questions. I have done that all my life, and though I have made a good many people mad, it has always been better for me in the end. Now, would you mind telling me if that young woman is engaged to somebody else, or if you are? Don't get angry. If anybody is angry I ought to be."

I was not in the least offended. There was an impetuous but kindly earnestness about the man which impressed me very agreeably. There are some people whose liberties are pleasant rather than otherwise; the Major was one of those people.

"I am not engaged," I said, with a smile, "and I have no reason to believe that she is."

Major Pendallas thrust his hands into his trousers pockets, strolled to the end of the large room, and then, turning, came back and sat down.

"I believe," said he, "that the man who lives alone does more thinking to the minute than other people. When she was pouring out the coffee to-night, and you were handing your cup to her, and both of you were laughing at the sugar, I stopped eating and said to myself, 'That is as perfect a match as I ever saw.' And in regard to human beings it is very seldom that I think that. And now you turn around and tell me that you and she go single."

I could not help laughing at the serious way in which he discussed the subject.

"I am sorry to dissapoint you," said I, "but Miss Weldon and I are not marrying people. For myself, I cannot afford matrimony."

"That's what I once thought," he said, "and for thirty-five years I have regretted that I was foolish enough to think so."

It was plain that my host was a man of nervous temperament. He could not sit still while considering the subject, evidently of deep interest to him. He now rose, folded his arms, and looked at me steadily for fully a minute. As he gazed at me his eyes seemed to grow brighter and larger.

"It was my intention to make a business proposition to you, founded on what you and Miss Weldon said about this part of the country and how much you liked it. I considered it one of the happiest thoughts I had ever had."

"What was it?" I asked, a good deal amused, but careful not to show it. "I shall be glad to hear it, whether I can accept it or not."

"All right," said the Major, seating himself with decision; "you shall have it. I will make the proposition in the common-sense, straightforward manner in which I intended to make it. For over ten months I have been kicking and fuming at being obliged to live here in this lonely house. To-night I said to myself, over and over again, 'What would I give if these two would eat all their meals with me; would come here and live in this house?' And then I said, 'Why shouldn't they? He's a landscape painter, and they would want to live somewhere in the country, and are not likely to find any place more beautiful than this. Now, perhaps that's just what they want, and what they are looking for, and the best thing you can do is to make them an offer without loss of time.' While I was thinking of this my spirits went up to about a hundred in the shade, but when you told me you were not an engaged couple down they went, I don't know how far."

Flies.

One of the most aggravating things to a person of good sense is the method which people employ in dealing with flies. They are useful scavengers, and if they would limit their inroads to places where they are needed, they would do good service. Unfortunately, however, when they once come in force, they often pervade the most cleanly homes. One of the most successful methods in dealing with flies is to hang up some herb or plant which is offensive to them, and not offensive to the residents of the house.

Sweet clover, which grows plentifully by the roadside, and has a faint, pleasant odor, unobjectionable to any one not afflicted with hay fever, has the reputation of being abhorred by flies. A few sprays of this plant hung in the parlor, or a cluster of the sweet, tassel-like heads as a bouquet on the center-table, will do more work in ridding the room of flies than a dozen fly-traps. There is considerable doubt whether any trap which contains molasses, sugar or any such material does not draw in more flies than it kills, besides being a disgusting and uncleanly way of meeting this nuisance.

There is no hope of dealing successfully with flies unless scrupulous cleanliness is the rule of the house. The pertinacity of flies has been celebrated by Homer, and an Englishman, taking advantage of this trait, has just invented a curious kind of window-pane, which is a successful means of driving flies out of the room as well as preventing their ingress. It is well known that flies climb upward from the bottom of the pane to the top. This summer window-pane has the top cut off about an inch, so that when the fly crawls up he naturally goes outdoors. In order to prevent the ingress of flies by the same plan, a small piece of pane coming down from the top overlaps this open space, but does not touch the pane below, leaving just room for the fly to crawl up and out. To come in he must crawl down the pane, which a fly seldom or never does.

It is not intended that the permanent window-pane should be arranged in this way, but that a window-frame with panes of this kind should be substituted for summer use. As a preventive of flies, the wire window and door frame has certain advantages, but it excludes the light and air to some extent as well as flies, and is altogether an ugly contrivance.—New York Tribune.

IT may be noticed that the man who refuses to do his duty as a citizen by no means resigns his privileges as a critic. He gives no aid to good government, but rails as loudly as his neighbors against the evils of misrule.

MARYLAND ROASTER AND BAKER

IMPROVED ROASTER & BAKER

FOR MEATS, FOWL, FISH, ETC., AND FOR BAKING BREAD, CAKES AND PUDDINGS.

BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

THURSDAY.....NOVEMBER 24, 1892.

THE estimate for next year's pensions, is $180,000,000, so Commissioner Raum says.

ILLINOIS gave Cleveland a plurality of 26,918. Chicago and Cook county alone gave him 33,270.

GOV. GRAY is talked of as a member of Cleveland's cabinet. He would fill any place with credit.

GREAT storms have been prevailing in the west, in some instances, they have had heavy snow.

WHITLEY county gave Cleveland 283 majority; McNagny ran 56 ahead of Cleveland and 68 ahead of Mathews.

CALIFORNIA voted for an amendment to it's constitution to elect United States senators by a direct vote of the people.

THE democrats have a good majority in the Indiana legislature, which means the return of Senator Turpie to the U. S. senate.

McNAGNY made a splendid run for Congress. His plurality, 3,695 is the highest received by any democratic congressman in Indiana at this election.

INDIANA legislature will stand, senate; democrats, 35; republicans, 15. House: democrats, 63; republicans, 37. As before, the democrats get 11 congressmen, and the republicans, 2.

THE apportionment case from Henry county, has been commenced in the supreme court, but was delayed last week by the illness of Judge McBride. It may take several days.

NEWSPAPERS are now busy making up a cabinet for Cleveland. He will probably fix that up to suit himself. He can be trusted to select a group of honest men who are also statesmen. No ward politicians need apply.

REDBUD, a town in Illinois, was wrecked by a cyclone last Thursday morning. Nearly 100 buildings were destroyed and about a dozen killed outright, while several more will die.

ELKHART county, republican election board, threw out 11 precincts on account of informalities and irregularities. This beat the only democrat who had a majority, the county treasurer. About 2,000 votes were thus thrown out.

IN STEUBEN county, the plurality against Cleveland was 836; against Mathews, 831; against McNagny 833. The local ticket gave smaller republican pluralities. The prohibitionists polled 190 votes and the people's party 233.

THE Homestead strike is now ended. Many of the men have had no work since they were locked out the first week in July. They found they must work or greatly the coming winter and will now try to get work at their old places in the mills, or elsewhere.

THERE is a rumor that Judge Field of the U. S. supreme court will retire in time to permit Harrison to appoint a republican successor. As he is a democrat or has been supposed to be, this action looks suspicious. If he would wait till Cleveland is in, a better man would be selected to take his place.

THE prohibitionists increased their vote in this state over that of two years ago, only 754. The people's party polled only 4,000 more than they did two years ago. The republican vote falls off about 9,000 in the state, but the democrats polled about the same as before.

The total vote of the state was 519,478. Mathew's plurality is 6,976. Cleveland's is a little less.

THE tin plate works at Anderson, that were sold out about two months ago at sheriff's sale have begun work again. We are not foolish enough to claim that the election of Cleveland had anything to do with it, any more than the McKinley bill has. It is a small factory anyway, and of no great value. People, however will find that a business built up on business principles will stand by its own merit, and not by its politics.

REPUBLICAN editors are still making themselves ridiculous by claiming that the British will soon have our hides. By this, we suppose they think a Briton is better, wiser, stronger, more intelligent and more ingenious than a American. But we don't believe it And now, while Harrison is trying to find what defeated him, we would like to draw his attention to the utterly weak and throughly frightened men he has had for his editors. There lies his defeat.

SEVERAL voters on both sides, stamped the square by the name of the first candidate, and stamped no where else. They thought this voted a straight ticket, but it did not. It was a vote for only one man, the first on the ticket, the only man they had stamped. Had they put the stamp on the big square where the rooster or eagle is, they would have voted a straight ticket. There should be no more changes in the way of voting, and all will learn it by next time.

WE really feel sorry for some of our old-time democrats, who went off with the people's party. They are left out in the cold just when they could have been rejoicing with us over the greatest and proudest victory, democracy ever won. They made a serious mistake when they went off after false gods, and the sooner they see their error, and get back into the democratic procession, the better they will feel over it. They are too good fellows to go down to oblivion on a false issue.

THE democratic administration, in March, will find itself confronted by an empty treasury. Cleveland, four years ago, left over a hundred millions of surplus. This is all gone and there will likely be a deficiency of nearly that much, all due to republican incompetency, blundering and extravagance. Republicans have always claimed so much for their brilliant financial management, when the facts are, they only got along by means of immense revenues collected from the people. With plenty of money, any one can get along.

IT MUST grind the G. O. P. to come down in Ohio from 20,000 and 30,000 plurality in our presidentation elections, to a margin so close, that they have to throw out all irregular votes and precincts, in order to let their ticket squeeze through by a few hundred. The same may be said of Nebraska, where they used to have 50,000. Now they have there a plurality of less than 5,000 over the people's party, and lack over 30,000 of having as many as that party and the democrats together. Then there is Kansas, with its former 80,000 majority, now in the hands of the people's party and the democrats, besides the staunch state of Wisconsin, and a number of lesser states. And in addition a democratic president is elected by a two to one number of electors. It is a mighty come down for a party that for thirty years controlled a great nation. But it is all the result of the following false theories, and running counter to the best interests of the people. Strongly intrenched in power as they have been, they thought nothing could stand against them. They tempted the people too far, and are laid low before the most sweeping popular verdict ever given by a people.

Court.

Court closed last week on Saturday, after a pretty busy term. A great deal of work had been done in spite of the interruption caused by the campaign. The last important case on the docket was the divorce case between C. C. Boyer and his wife, formerly Mary E. Walsworth. It was an unfortunate marriage, and we believe in this case the sympathy of the community at large, is mainly with the lady. She had been a most successful teacher, and occupied a high position socially. But after her marriage with Mr. Boyer, things did not go on smoothly and after some years of married life they separated and the suit for divorce followed. They have two fine children, a girl and a boy, and there was a struggle as to who should have the custody of these. He was especially anxious to secure the boy. The court however, Judge Dawson of Ft. Wayne, occupying the bench at the time, decided that neither should have the custody of the children. But after due consideration, Boyer, thought as neither was likely to have charge of them, he would give up in part, and allowed both the children to be temporarily at least left with the mother. If this is so, then, whatever may be said of his conduct so far, yet in this at least, he showed some of the better traits of human nature. And this should be placed to his credit. No doubt it is like many similar troubles better that it is over. Mrs. Boyer, belongs to a highly respected family where of course she can have a good home as long as she chooses. The railroad case from near Chicago, was argued before Judge Bowers, at Ft. Wayne, but we have not heard the result. The case of Hank Little vs. Husselman for that whipping, has been taken to Steuben county on change of venue. Next term begins December 19.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, Administrator with will annexed the estate of Frederick Groscop, deceased, late of said county. Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

SYLVESTER KUTZNER, Administrator.
November 23rd, 1892
J. E. & J. H. ROSE, Att'ys.

Probate Cause No. 1836.

STATE OF INDIANA, } In the DeKalb
DEKALB COUNTY. } Circuit Court.

Notice is hereby given to Lena Groscop, Calvin Groscop and William Groscop, unpleaded with others, that Sylvester Kutzner as Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Frederick Groscop deceased, has filed in the Circuit Court of DeKalb county, Indiana, a petition, making them defendants thereto, and praying therein for an order and decree of said court authorizing the sale of certain real estate belonging to the estate of said decedent, and in said petition described, to make assets for the debts and liabilities of said estate; and that said petition, so filed and which is now pending, is set for hearing in said circuit court at the Court House in Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, on January the 4th, 1893.

WITNESS, The Clerk and Seal of said court, this 23rd day of November 1892.

DANIEL D. MOODY, Clerk, DeKalb Circuit Court, by R. Dexter Tefft, Deputy.
J. E. & J. H. ROSE, Att'ys.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein Robert T. Duncan is plaintiff, and Noah H. Gary and William W. Gary are defendants requiring me to make the sum of Thirty Three dollars and seven cents with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

Beginning at a point south of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad and at the northwest corner of land heretofore owned by William Peneton, thence west along the south side of the street to the northeast corner of lot twenty-five in Bassett's Addition to Waterloo, Indiana, thence south on a line being an extension of the east line of said lot twenty five in Bassett's addition to Waterloo to the northwest corner of lot twenty seven (27) in Bassett's Addition to Waterloo, Indiana, thence east along the north line of lots twenty six (26) and twenty-seven (27) to the northeast corner of lot twenty-six (26), thence north on a line parallel with the west line to the place of beginning, and the improvements thereon; said lot, said to contain two acres; situated in Bassett's Addition to Waterloo, DeKalb county, Indiana, and being in southeast quarter of section four (4) in township thirty-four (34) north of range thirteen (13) east.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

GEORGE O. RALSTON Sheriff of DeKalb county, by R. BLUM, deputy.
WM. H. LEAS, Att'y for plaintiff.
Auburn, November 22, 1892.

Tutt's Tiny Pills

To cure constipation purging the bowels should be avoided; it weakens their power of motion. A gentle aperient effect is only required. Tutt's Tiny Liver Pills are prepared with special views to the permanent cure of COSTIVENESS and HEADACHE.

They are mild and remain in the system until they act on the liver, cause a natural flow of bile and their tonic properties impart power to the bowels to remove unhealthy accumulations. Good appetite and digestion result from the use of these little pills. Price, 25c. Office, 140 to 144 Washington St., N. Y.

President Board of County Commissioners.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of David H. Murray, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb circuit court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 19th day of December, 1892, and show cause, if any, why my FINAL SETTLEMENT ACCOUNTS with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship, or claim, and receive their distributive shares.

Witness my name this 16th day of November 1892.

WILLIAM SEELEY, Administrator.

The cannonading last Monday evening, was at Jim Rowley's near Collingwood. It was a surprise to many to find it was only dynamite cartridges and not cannon. Many windows in Auburn rattled plainly at each shock, though the distance was not less than seven miles.

Reinold Blum, who has been the able deputy sheriff during Mr. Plum's term, continues the same work, for a time at least, under Mr. Ralston. He will be a valuable help, for he has proved himself not only faithful and competent, but has been pleasant and gentlemanly in all his work.

B. F. Myers, of Butler township, brought a fine eagle to town Saturday that he had killed Thursday. It measured seven feet from tip to tip, and was a fine bird. It was caught in a trap just a week before near Miller's mill, and had carried the trap off, taking it more than a mile. When Mr. Myers found him, he was still fast and full of fight, although a week without food.

Mrs. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for the past twelve years, says; "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for reason for this. No other is so certain in a preventative and cure for croup; no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Cory Shugers has made some very needed improvements in his lunch room and is now able to more fully accommodate his customers who come there for lunch. Convenience seems to be the motive power that actuates his efforts in behalf of a patronizing public. He is doing a lucrative business, which has steadily grown in proportions since his taking charge of the institution about three years ago.

John Leasure, formerly a resident of this place, but now of Angola, is one of that class of enterprising business men, who do not remain very long idle. In conversation with him a few days since, the scribe learned that he intended to engage in business. He has studied out an original plan to interest customers and at the same time appeal to their appetites for something good to eat "The Two Johns, senior and junior—father and son" will constitute the business title. John knows his business.

The re-election of Mr. Hoffelder and Mr. Henderson, means that the people have confidence in their honesty and ability and that they resented the indiscriminate attack made on them from every quarter. It means too, that the course they had started in on, namely to save money for the county by building cheaper bridges, and watching the public expenses, has the substantial backing of the taxpayers. Half the fault found with them came from the determination they had reached, to cut down the bridge expense, and when the people got to see how this was as outlined in the COURIER several times they saw the commissioners were right, and came up and helped to re-elect them. We still believe it their duty to put in cheap bridges on small streams or on lines of road not much traveled. There should not be another stone abutment and iron bridge at any point except near a town or where heavy travel goes along. The people have decided this question in this very way by backing these two gentlemen up with their votes, thus saying that the course so well begun was the course to keep up. With the experience these two men have had, we believe they will go forward in a way to suit the people, pay off the debt and gain the esteem of every taxpayer in the county. Whether Mr. Lockwood will go on fighting for $5,000 bridges at $1,000 sites we do not know. But for a time he has acted as if he had given up trying to earn his salary in any way.

Another Auburn boy gets to the front. B. K. Rush, son of W. E. Rush, was elected one of the commissioners of Sargent county, No. Dakota, at the late election. He is a republican, and the only man of his party that carried the county, the fusionists getting all the other offices. It takes the DeKalb man to "get there."

Miss Della Shugers is to be married to-day, to Mr. W. H. Leedy, the traveling agent for the Ft. Wayne Journal. Mr. Healy of the Presbyterian church, performs the ceremony. Mr. Leedy is a most worthy young man, and well deserves the estimable lady he is so fortunate as to secure. The COURIER wishes them both its best and highest big wish.

Sheriff G. C. Ralston took his office last week, on Thursday, having moved into the jail residence on Monday. Like Mr. Plum he is the son of a DeKalb county sheriff, and goes into the office with the prestige of a good record of work done by his father. He will, we believe make an excellent officer. He starts in while court is in session, and will therefore not have to wait for business.

Mr. Moore, the postmaster at Bradshaw, Va., after reading an advertisment of Chamberlain's colic, cholera and diarrhea remedy, concluded to try a small bottle of it. He says: "I used it it in two cases for colic and diarrhea with perfect satisfaction. I have handled and used a great deal of patent medicine but never tried any that gave as good results as this." For sale by Robbins & McCord.

A new illustrated magazine of the first class in point of grade, ability and interest is soon to make its appearance. It is intended to be, and no doubt will be, the equal of Harper's, Scribner's. The Century and other leading and popular magazines It is called "Worthington's Illustrated Magazine," and the first number appears in January. Besides its leading articles there will be several departments all in able hands. Single copies 25 cents. Published by A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn.

Ex Sheriff Phil Plum and wife moved to Waterloo last week and will occupy their new home on South Wayne street. They formerly lived in that place, and their old neighbors will welcome their return. They left a host of warm friends here, not least of whom were the Sunday scholars of Mrs. Plum's class, who had become greatly attached to her. In fact, she will be missed in all good works. Mr. Plum himself, has no less endeared himself to our people. Besides, he has been a faithful, exemplary officer, discharging the difficult duties with care and thoroughness. No one who supported him for his two terms will ever regret doing so. We hope both may be seen over here often.

C. E. VanAuken, the new surveyor, entered on the duties of his office last week. As we said lately, he is a man of ability and long experience in engineering, and is abundantly able to do all classes of work that may come up in his line of duty. All the new officers are now at work—a full line of democrats, Moody for clerk, Coffinberry for auditor, Sawvel for treasurer, Williams for recorder, Ralston for sheriff, VanAuken for surveyor and all filling their posts with ability. Coroner Miser is of course ready for anything that comes in his line, and the commissioners, Hoffelder and Henderson are still at work in their old terms. Franks, our new representative, will not have to go to Indianapolis till January, But we believe he will made a careful, intelligent member. The sheriff and treasurer are the first officers to take pay under the new fee and salary law. The surveyor had a law made for his especial benefit, that went into effect some time ago.

Alta Moody, did a very artistic piece of skilled work, on the Kiblinger decorations Saturday. The big bunch of electric lights that read "Grover" were his work. He designed it, and put it up and ran the wires, in fact the work was all his own, though of course Harley Baker and the other boys in the store helped put it up. He may well feel proud of this display of the electrician's art.

Rosa Harter, daughter of John F. Harter of Dist. No. 8 Richland township, has a record for punctuality in her school attendance, probably not equaled in the state. She has been in attendance at school for eight years, has never been tardy, absent only one day and then for sickness. She has one mile to school This not only speaks well for the girl but also for the interest that Mr. and Mrs. Harter have taken in the welfare of their daughter.

Are your children subject to croup? If so, you should never be without a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough remedy. It is a certain cure for croup, and has never been known to fail. If given freely as soon as the croupy cough appears it will prevent the attack. It is the sole reliance with thousands of mothers who have croupy children, and never disappoints them. There is no danger in giving this Remedy in large and frequent doses, as it contains nothing injurious. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord's.

Just to be clever with our democratic friends this week, and assist them to demonstrate that democratic success means cheaper goods, we will offer for the next ten days some special bargains, among which will be the following: One lot of $30 solid oak bedroom suits for $22 50; one lot of $5 silk chenille Turcoman curtains for $3 85 a pair; three $14 one hundred piece dinner sets handsomely decorated for $8 25; one lot of decorated toilet sets, including slop jars, worth $12, for $6.75. A pretty strong statement, but a visit to the crockery stores will show you it is absolutely correct.

The Ashley Times has been enlarged and otherwise improved. Bro. Strayer says that June 23, when his first number appeared, it was issued from the only building in Ashley, he being the first citizen. Now there are many business advertisements in the paper, among them being our friends, the Gonser Brothers, W. W. Wyrick and Charlie Ling, now of Ashley. Several enterprising Auburn firms also have advertisements, G. H. Yesbera, the Auburn merchant tailor and dealer in clothing, has a large one, as has his brother F. J. Yesbera, the jeweler, and John T Picker has one as contractor and builder. We can conscientiously recommend all these firms to the good people of the new city and the region round about.

Jacob Hook, for four years our county surveyor, gave place, last Tuesday, to his successors, C. E. VanAuken. He will move back to his home, in Stafford township, this week. He and his wife will leave many warm friends here. They began their married life here. For about two years Mrs. Hook, who is a lady of ability and education, has been one of his assistants in the office, doing her work most satisfactorily. And Mr. Hook himself, though originally not a practical engineer, has been a successful officer, one who has required the work done to be well and honestly carried out. That he has made some enemies in this no one will deny, but we believe as we have often asserted, that he has labored to do his work as it ought to be done, even when he knew it was making enemies. Our people will wish him and his wife well in the home to which they now retire.

SINCE the Government of Mysore is about to prohibit the marriage of girls under 10, it is evident that the deplorable condition of child widows in India will be materially improved —an improvement the more to be hailed as the dawn of a better day for the whole country, as it comes from within, and presumably from a conviction of the evils it will prevent.

A GRAND JURY in Connecticut has indicted a night telegraph operator for criminal carelessness in having caused a wreck. The peculiar genius who can kill himself and not be reckoned a lunatic has yet to appear on the scene.

THERE are comparatively few round-top trunks made now. The idea was that greater resisting power could be obtained with least weight by imitating to some extent the shape of an egg, which, as we know, will bear an absurdly great weight, but, unfortunately, there was no guarantee that the baggage-smasher would always stand the trunk the right way up. His failure to do this gave numberless reminders of the fact that no box is stronger than at its weakest point, and the damaged sides became very common. Now most trunks are made with flat tops, and are so strong all over that it is very difficult, evenfor an expert trunk smasher, to break one.

A KENTUCKY patriot excuses the family feuds of the dark and bloody ground on the plea that guerrilla warfare seems to be a natural effect of highland climates. He quotes the vendettas of the Corsican mountaineers, and the brigandage of the Apennines and Afghan uplands, but seems to forget that in vast areas of the Tennessee, Virginia, New Hampshire, Vermont, Georgia, and North Carolina mountains deeds of violence are almost unknown, or limited to the occasional removal of a revenue raider. In Switzerland, too, family fueds are known only from the traditions of the past, and the Tyrolese highlanders are about the most law-abiding bipeds of our latter-day world.

THE English admiralty recently disposed of what was left of the hull of the glorious old Foudroyant, the vessel so closely associated in the public mind with the triumphs of Lord Nelson at Trafalgar. A thrifty German was the purchaser, and with an eye to business he intended to have it cut up into thousands of pieces to be sold as historic curiosities. A number of Englishmen were so shocked at the idea of this silent witness of British valor being sold, chopped to pieces, and hawked about the world, that they proposed to raise a purse with which to buy it back. The German fixed the price at £6,000. At last accounts only £300 had been subscribed and the Teuton will carry out his original intention.

A Monastic Tithe Barn.

The last in England of the monastic tithe-barns, the edifices in which the mediæval abbots were accustomed to gather the tribute of those who owed them rent and service, is in process of demolition. It is the survivor of the two that were built at Peterborough, and dates back to 1307. It is a long and narrow structure with low walls and a massive oak frame supporting a singularly beautiful roof of gray stone slates. There is not a nail in the building, stout wooden pegs being used throughout. The historic edifice was bought by a builder for $5,500, and a vain endeavor was made by local antiquarians to have it preserved. But as Peterborough Cathedral had just expended $45,000 for a new and very modern marble floor, there was no money left for sentiment of that sort, and commerce claims one more conquest of antiquity.

THE Smith College girls have taken to base-ball, and, judging from what the critics say of their game, it might not be a bad idea to send the Chicago nine there to learn a few lessons.

THE SNAKE SCOTCHED.

IT WILL NEVER REAR ITS UGLY CREST AGAIN.

For the Truths of Tariff Reform Will Be Preached Until Accepted by All the People—What the New Era Denotes—McKinley on Factory Building.

What the Landslide Means.

It means that neither McKinleyism nor protectionism will ever again be the leading issue in this country.

It means that farmers and laborers, who always pay an undue proportion of tariff taxes, have discovered that "protection" is a false god set up by manufacturers.

It means that the so-called "statesmen" who have aided and abetted the manufacturers in their robbery of the people, will be retired forever to private life.

It means that we will never again be compelled to listen to twaddle about the foreigner paying our taxes; about cheap coats making cheap men; about raising wages by giving a bonus to employers; about taxing ourselves into prosperity, and about a dozen other economic fallacies connected with "protection."

It means that the question of the best kind of taxation for national purposes will hereafter be discussed by earnest students of economics instead of by demagogues.

It means that our manufacturers will soon have free raw materials—wool, iron, copper, lumber, lead, coal, salt, tin plate, etc.

It means that duties which support trusts will be abolished.

It means that Americans will soon not be compelled to pay more for agricultural machines, bicycles, hardware, and hundreds of other articles than do foreigners.

It means that we will soon have better clothing at very much lower prices.

It means that manufacturers will cease to rely upon politicians, tariffs, and trusts to make their business profitable, and will become independent and self-reliant.

It means that, commercially, we will soon become the leading nation of the earth—the position we should now occupy but for the incubus of protection which has rested on us for thirty years.

It means that early in the twentieth century we will be building and sailing more ships than any other country.

It means increased production and more work at higher wages.

It means that farmers will cease to mortgage their farms to support "home markets" which remain abroad.

It means that farmers will realize more on their products and that the value of their lands will increase as their mortgages decrease.

It means that political corruption will decline at least 75 per cent. and that purity in politics will no longer be an "iridescent dream."

It means that with the discarding of the system which has produced one-third of our millionaires (according to the New York Tribune) one of the great causes of class distinctions and the accompanying evils will be removed.

It means, in short, greater prosperity, more intelligence, better morals and increased happiness.

McKinley on Factory Building.

Ralph E. Hoyt, of Chicago, in a letter to the editor of the Herald of that city, utters some truths well worth the attention of thinking people. He says: Mr. McKinley said in one of his recent speeches: "A revenue tariff never built a factory in the United States."

Nobody says it did. Tariff laws of any kind do not build factories, nor is it the business of the government to build them, or to furnish them with special privileges after they are built and put in operation. But probably Mr. McKinley meant, if he meant anything by such a statement, that no factories have been established in this country during the existence of a revenue tariff. If so, he is a long way from the truth, though that is something over which he is probably not at all worried.

From 1850 to 1860 this country had what was understood to be "a tariff for revenue only." It was designed as such, and if there was any protection in it at all the protective feature was very slight and purely incidental. It was such a low tariff that any similar measure now would be denounced by protection champions as "free trade." And yet that decade was one of great prosperity in manufacturing industries. During that period no less than 17,400 factories were erected in the United States, or more than 1,700 a year on an average. The increase of capital interested in manufacturing interests was 90 per cent.; the increase of manufactured goods was 85 per cent.; the aggregate increase of wages was 60 per cent.; and the increase of wages per capita was 17 per cent. From 1860 to 1892 we have had an era of protective tariffs, with a constant upward tendency, to meet the growing greed of the stalwart "infants" nursed by Uncle Sam. This whole period of thirty-two years does not show any such ratios of increase in manufactures as are shown by census reports for the ten years preceding the war. In the light of these facts it will be difficult for McKinley and his associates to make intelligent men believe that even free trade would ruin the country.

The Farmer's Foreign Market.

Mr. E. W. Stout, a farmer whose place is near Trenton, N. J., visited his father in England recently. Before starting, as he tells a New York Times reporter, he talked with some of his Jersey neighbors, "and we agreed that if I found on getting on the other side that I could buy some plows and other things and get them out to Trenton so that we could save 10 per cent. I should do it." Mr. Stout thus tells the sequel:

"Well, I've done it, and in the course of a few days the things will arrive, and I reckon that I shall save considerably more than 10 per cent. On the plows the saving will be fully 25 per cent. I think, for the prices for American-made plows on the other side are just about half the prices charged for the same things in this country. I bought hay rakes, cultivators, feed cutters and plows, and everything will come back to this country in the same packing that was on it when it was shipped from the factory."

No wonder Farmer Stout is moved to add to this plain, unvarnished tale this wrathful bit of comment:

"'Protection,' the Republicans call it. 'Robbery' is my name for it. It's nothing short of robbery when taxes make me pay $10 for a piece of farm machinery that the manufacturer sends abroad for sale at about half that sum, in spite of the extra expenses of packing and freightage. I'd have stayed on the other side another fortnight if I hadn't thought it my duty to come home and vote for tariff reform and get my neighbors to do the same."

Farmers who have wondered why farming didn't pay, and have been told by the administration that they ought to diversify their crops, may be better able to see where the leak is by the light of this revelation from one of their own fraternity. — Philadelphia Record.

Yes, with a Vengeance.

The American Economist of Nov. 4, last issue before election, instead of putting, as usual, a dozen "questions to free traders" puts but one: "Can you, with clear mind and true heart, vote for Grover Cleveland and the Democratic ticket and be happy thus to win the approval of the Cobden Club, the titled nobility, and the great manufacturers of England?"

Republican Theory Tested.

Edward Atkinson, the foremost political economist in the country of the kind that deduces theories from facts and not facts from theories, has issued a pamphlet summarizing the results of the latest census bulletins and applying them to the question of the tariff. Dividing the working population into seven classes he shows, by the last two censuses, that only one class is at all affected by foreign competition, and that only half of that class, or 5 per cent. of the working population, or .016 per cent. of the entire population, is actually affected. The wages of skilled labor have increased from census to census, but this is due to recognized laws created by the skillful application of methods developed by science. In unskilled labor the increase has been much less, and in farm labor the increase is 1 cent a day. To equalize the increase in wages, to give 95 per cent. of the working population the same chances as 5 per cent., and to move from that 5 per cent. artificial restrictions which cause destructive reactions, Mr. Atkinson shows that it is necessary to remove the duties at once from all the crude materials which are necessary in the process of domestic industry and to keep duties for revenue on finished products and manufactures. When that is done our manufacturers will be placed upon even terms in their competition with other countries in the cost of fibres, metals, drugs, dye-stuffs, chemicals, and the like, in many of which we now enjoy a great advantage over other nations. In agriculture, the mechanic arts, in mining, and in a large part of the manufacturing arts we now possess a great advantage over all foreign nations.

When the Democratic policy of promoting domestic industry by exempting from duties all important materials that are used therein has been adopted, the only remaining question would be how to protect American labor from undue competition in the moderate number of arts of which a finished product of like kind can now be imported, until the unwholesome effect of a high tariff has been overcome. In dealing with this factor we may rightly adopt the policy laid down in the Republican platform in the following terms: "On all imports coming into competition with the products of American labor there should be levied duties equal to the difference between wages at home and abroad." We may adopt the policy without discussing it, as the necessity for revenue will not permit any lower duties at present than would be imposed if it is adopted as a compromise—in fact, much higher rating must for a time be continued.

It will be observed that the proportion of labor in converting crude materials into finished products, as disclosed by these statistics of manufacturing, ranges from 18.84 per cent. in Chicago to 32.4 per cent. in Grand Rapids, averaging 25 per cent., substantially the same ratio governing the textile arts. It is claimed by the advocates of protection that the rates of wages of the manufacturing arts in this country are double what they are in the manufacturing countries of Europe. This is not the case in respect to rates of wages in Great Britian, our chief competitor; but let it be granted for the purpose of removing any objection to tariff reform. Let it also be granted that if we abated the duties on crude materials we should compete on equal or better terms in competition with the countries in all but manufacturing labor. Let it then be granted that, in dealing with tae element of labor in the factory and the workshop, the cost of labor in the unit of product is to be determined by a comparison of the rates of wages, although such is not the case. If it were so our chief competitors would be on the Continent of Europe, in France, Germany, Italy, and Austria, where the general rates of wages are lower than our own.

But having thus come to an agreement for practical legislation we may legislate on the following basis: We may leave out articles of luxury, laces, silks, embroidery, furs, fine cotton and worsted fabrics and the like, to be subjected to special rates for revenue purposes. Most of these articles depend upon fashion and fancy for their sale rather than upon cost or utility. They are, therefore, suitable subjects for high revenue duties, and have so been dealt with by the Democratic party in both the Morrison and the Mills bills, and in all proposed adjustments of the tariff. Dealing only with the useful goods which are consumed by the million rather than by the millionaires, the ratio would then be substantially as follows, admitting all that the advocates of protection claim:

	United States.	European manufacturing States.
Cost of materials, general expense and other charges	75	75
Labor in factory or workshop	25	12½
Duty on foreign cost to equalize labor or wages 15 per cent		87.50 12.50

Losses in Wheat and Cotton.

Sufficient returns have been received to enable the American Agriculturist to make an approximate estimate of the wheat crop of 1892, and it puts it down at 495,000,000 bushels. This is a falling off of 117,000,000 bushels from the crop of last year (612,000,000 bushels), and this decrease in the quantity raised does not tell the whole story. Instead of the falling off being attended by higher prices, it has actually been attended by lower prices. On October 29 of last year No. 2 red wheat was quoted in St. Louis at 92 cents a bushel, and on October 29 of the present year at 65 cents—a decline of 24 cents.

Here, then, is a falling off of 117,000,000 bushels in the size of the crop and of 24 cents a bushel in the price. Last year's crop (612,000,000 bushels) at last year's October price, 92 cents, was worth to our wheat raisers $563,000,000; and this year's crop (495,000,000 bushels) at this year's October price, 65 cents, is worth only $321,750,000—a loss of $241,250,000. And this on a single staple in one year.

And when we look down south we find that the cotton raisers are in a similar predicament. The cotton crop of last year was 8,700,000 bales, which, at the August price in 1891, was worth $50 a bale, or $435,000,000 for the crop. But Agriculturist estimates the crop of 1892 at only 6,500,000 bales, which at the August price in 1892 is worth only $35 a bale, or $227,500,000 for the crop—a falling off of $207,500,000. Add this to the wheat loss and we have a loss of $448,000,000, with only two staples heard from.

How rich we would grow under the McKinley policy, particularly the wheat raisers of the West and the cotton raisers of the South!—St. Louis Republic.

A Memorable Kick.

The people have broken the kicking record. Republicanism, McKinleyism, protection, and monopoly were kicked into the middle of eternity. There will be no resurrection for them. Ten million voters have employed Presidents, Senators, and Congressmen to make laws for all. These servants of the people have accepted bribes from a few thousand manufacturers and made laws that robbed the millions to enrich these few manufacturers. Encouraged by their successes the manufacturers increased their bribes and the mis-representatives of the people extended their bold scheme of robbery. This process has been repeated several times during the last thirty years. The people have been slow to discover the schemes and to believe in the guilt of their servants. But as Lincoln said: "You can't fool all of the people all of the time," and at last the most credulous have been compelled to believe that their interests have been betrayed. The kick of November 8, 1892, will be a memorable one.

The Protection Shirt.

Albert R. Leeds is professor of chemistry in Stevens Institute, Hoboken, N. J. Being requested by many prominent citizens of Hoboken, both Republican and Democrat, to make public his reasons for leaving the Republican party, he did so in a speech on Nov. 4. He left the Republican party mainly because of its position on the tariff-protection for protection's sake. He thinks that such protection corrupts morals and causes class distinctions. He says, with Garfield: "I am for protection that leads to ultimate free trade." He says this is good orthodox Republican doctrine from which the party has strayed, and that neither his reason nor his conscience will permit him to follow it. As a result he is left in the Democratic party.

Prof. Leeds has traveled in Europe and has purchased goods there. He is firmly convinced that the foreigner does not pay our tariff taxes. He showed two small linen table-cloths of the same pattern, one purchased in New York and the other in Cologne, the former at $3.75 and the latter at $2.50. He mentioned other articles that showed even greater differences in price.

He has come to the conclusion, reached by all sincere investigators, that American labor at American wages is as cheap as European labor at European wages. On this question he says:

I was much struck by the reply which a manufacturer of textile machinery, employing 1,500 hands in Manchester, made to my question as to what had most impressed him in his visit of six months' duration to the factories of the United States. He was a member of Parliament sent out on a tour of inquiry in America by the Royal Commission on Technical Education. He replied that it was the feverish way in which the American mechanic appeared to him to do his work, laboring as though his prospects for the future depended upon his putting all his heart and soul into it, and in his turning out in the shortest possible length of time an amount of work which to the more phlegmatic Englishman appeared incredible. As far as true labor cost and producing capacity are concerned, the American mechanic is more than a match for his competitor the world over, and his truest friends are now asking to back him in a fair fight, no protection gloves being worn, and without favor.

One of Prof. Leed's greatest objections to McKinley protection is that it has deteriorated the quality of goods and introduced greater dishonesty into trade. He illustrated this part of his speech with a shirt and two pairs of stockings. Here is what he said:

The effect of inflated protection is to bring about an unfair competition which degrades the character of American goods, places the dishonest imitation in competition with the superior fabrics from which its pattern and finish are copied, and does away with the necessity of artistic skill and advanced technical education. These debasing effects were strikingly shown after the passage of the McKinley bill. At first there was a sharp rise of prices corresponding to the increased duties. But the people could not pay the increase, and the prices fell to their former level, an inferior article being substituted. To illustrate how this was done, I have here to show you the famous "25-cent stocking." Of the two pairs which I show you, this, which was sold before the higher tariff, weighs forty-seven grains; the other pair, such as is sold now for twenty-five cents and having the same trade-mark and purporting to be just the same goods, weighs thirty-three grains. It weighs one-fourth less, and is of an open, flimsy texture, representing hardly half the value and endurance of the old goods.

In another store I purchased a shirt of American make for 98 cents, marked "Men's Fine Natural Wool." I purposely asked the salesman three times whether it was all wool, and he positively declared that it was. On treating it with washing soda the shoddy filling at once came off and only the cotton backing remained. In this bottle I have the dissolved shoddy. On adding acid to it you see that the shoddy comes to light again as so many dirty white flocks. It may be said that falsehoods of this character are a part of ordinary business, but the telling of them both by manufacturers and sellers of these debased domestic goods has been greatly stimulated by a competition of which theft is regarded as a necessary feature.

We heard a great deal at one time of what was called the bloody shirt. It long outlived its usefulness as a campaign scarecrow, and is now consigned to well-merited oblivion. But the shirt I show you might justly be regarded as a fit emblem of the inflationists, and be held aloft by them as a standard under the name of the Protection Shirt. Its thickness and apparent warmth are all shoddy and represent that part of the protection which goes to the manufacturer. It won't wash. Its substance is this open gauze of cotton like a mosquito net, but with meshes so coarse that even a Jersey mosquito might slip through. This is the part of the protection which will be enjoyed by the laboring man who wears, and quickly wears out, the shirt. It won't keep him warm this winter; he will decidedly be left out in the cold.

When competition is on a fair basis, manufacturers must continually improve the quantity as well as increase output and diminish cost. They must invent new and more artistic patterns and designs; they must add the latest refinements in finish and taste; they must anticipate the latest caprice or novelty of fashion; they cannot safely steal or copy, they must invent. But when goods having all the virtues above spoken of are shut out of the country, except to the rich who will and do buy them at any price, the domestic manufacturer finds it much cheaper and easier servilely to imitate than to produce a domestic article of genuine merit.

A Terrible Wreck.

Few more tragic disasters of the sea are recorded than that which befell the fine steel bark Newfield August 29 on the Victorian coast at Curdie's River. The vessel went on the shore and nine men lost their lives. The exact spot where the Newfield struck is an evil-looking reef that runs out some hundreds of yards from under towering cliffs. The tops of the cliffs turn stiffly over a sheer fall of about 100 feet, and at the base and all round there is a network of sharp rock teeth, on any one of which a ship might meet her fate. It was upon the highest and most dangerous of all that the Newfield sailed in the darkness.

Captain Scott mistook the light on shore, and before he could remedy his error the ship struck, became wedged in the rocks, and was swept by huge rollers. Then began a struggle for life, the captain and crew evidently thinking their only safety lay in reaching the shore, whereas if they had remained on board all would have been saved. The life-boat was launched, and the captain and twenty-two men got aboard. The sea was so heavy, however, that she was water-logged, and the men on board saw that they must regain the ship or be lost. By great efforts fifteen men succeeded in reaching the deck. The captain and the others went down with the life-boat. The survivors got out the other life-boat, and at a great risk all on board reached the shore. A great crowd thronged the beach, and there was deep disgust when it was learned that the vessel was loaded with salt.—San Francisco Examiner.

IT ISN'T IN THE ORDINARY WAY that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the weak and suffering woman who needs it. It's guaranteed. Not with words merely; any medicine can make claims and promises. What is done with the "Favorite Prescription" is this: if it fails to benefit or cure, in any case, your money is returned. Can you ask any better proof that a medicine will do what it promises?

It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and a certain remedy for the ills and ailments that beset a woman. In "female complaint" of every kind, periodical pains, internal inflammation or ulceration, bearing-down sensations, and all chronic weaknesses and irregularities, it is a positive and complete cure.

To every tired, overworked woman, and to every weak, nervous, and ailing one, it is guaranteed to bring health and strength.

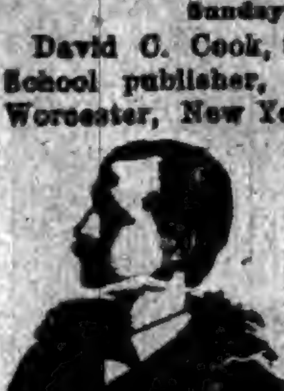
DAVID C. COOK.

The Pioneer Publisher of Literature for Sunday Schools.



DAVID C. COOK.

David C. Cook, the Chicago Sunday School publisher, was born in East Worcester, New York, in 1850, a son of Rev. E. S. Cook, a Methodist minister, a cultured and scholarly man. Since earliest childhood he has been devoted to the Sunday School. In boyhood he joined the church, and began teaching in the Sunday School at the age of seventeen in the West Division of Chicago, and for four years following taught most of the time in two or three schools each Sabbath.

The fire of 1871 was the beginning of his mission and Sunday-school work on the North Side. His field was one of the roughest and poorest of the burnt district. Here, in a German theater and beer-hall, he organized "Everybody's Mission," afterwards removed to a building of its own. With an attendance of 350 to 450, he sustained the school for five years without the aid of church or society.

Besides this, he has since organized and superintended North Avenue Mission, Lake View Mission, Lake View Union Sunday-schools in Chicago, and the Sunday-school connected with Grace Church in Elgin, Ill., besides several smaller schools.

His first publications were issued for his own Sunday-schools alone. Neighboring Sunday-schools, appreciating the value of these helps, became his first subscribers. Soon Mr. Cook discovered that his were not the only schools that needed more and better literature than they could afford to buy at the prices then existing, and resolved to make it his life work to place in the hands of the Sunday-school children of the land an abundance of the very best literature at the lowest possible prices.

He was met at the very outset with almost insurmountable obstacles and lively opposition; but the obstacles and opposition only furnished zest, for he is a man of purpose, and it has been well said of him, "his indomitable energy demands insurmountable obstacles." That his purpose was good and wise is proved by the way he has been supported.

It is seventeen years since he issued his first publication, and there is now scarcely a village or hamlet in the land where they are not known and used. He employs regularly six associate editors and some sixty writers, representing some of the ablest Sunday school talent in the land.

Among those who know him personally he is always recognized as a man of strong Christian character, a practical worker in the church, Sunday school and temperance cause, and a warm friend of missions, both home and foreign.

The Man-Faced Crab.

One of the most singular-looking creatures that ever walked the earth, or "swam the waters under the earth," is the world-famous man-faced crab of Japan. Its body is hardly an inch in length, yet the head is fitted with a face which is the perfect counterpart of a Chinese coolie—a veritable missing link, with eyes, nose and mouth all clearly defined. This curious and uncanny creature, besides the great likeness it bears to a human being in the face, is provided with two legs which seem to grow from the top of its head and hang down over the side of its face.

Gardens and Patience.

Nothing teaches patience like a garden. All have to wait for the fruits of the earth. You may go round and watch the opening bud from to-day; but it takes its own time, and you cannot urge it on faster. If forced, it is only torn to pieces. All the best results of a garden, like those of life, are slowly but regularly progressive. Each year does a work that nothing but a year can do. "Learn to labor and to wait" is one of the best lessons of a garden. All that is good takes time, and comes only by growth.

Hard to Suit.

Mrs. Slimdiet—I don't know how I'm ever to get along with that new boarder. It's just worrying me sick trying to find something he will like.

Friend—Queer tastes, has he?

Mrs. Slimdiet—I should say so. He doesn't like ham or liver or tripe or anything.

It is a great domestic remedy, and should be kept in every home. Mr. Norman Cheatham, Waverly, Sussex Co., Va., who has never been without it for twelve years subscribes to this opinion. He says: "Our family has been using Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for twelve years and are never without it in the house. It is invaluable."

THE pain of living without pleasure is well worth the pleasure of dying without pain.

GIVE a man half a chance, and he will take all of it.

Colorless, Emaciated, Helpless

A Complete Cure by HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA.

This is from Mr. D. M. Jordan, a retired farmer, and one of the most respected citizens of Otsego County, N. Y.:

"Fourteen years ago I had an attack of the gravel, and have since been troubled with my

Liver and Kidneys

gradually growing worse. Three years ago I got down so low that I could scarcely walk. I looked more like a corpse than a living being. I had no appetite and for five weeks I ate nothing but gruel. I was badly emaciated and had no more color than a marble statue. Hood's Sarsaparilla was recommended and I thought I would try it. Before I had finished the first bottle I noticed that I felt better, suffered less, the inflammation of the bladder had subsided, the color began to return to my face, and I began to feel hungry. After I had taken three bottles I could eat anything without hurting me. Why, I got so hungry that I had to eat five times a day. I have now fully recovered, thanks to

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I feel well and am well. All who know me marvel to see me so well." D. M. JORDAN.

Cheerful Study.

Orthography is commonly reckoned a pretty dry subject, but there is no branch of knowledge but may be brightened by a skillful teacher. A visitor was chatting with the little daughter of the family.

"What do you study at school?" he asked.

"Readin' an' writin' 'rithmetic an' spellin'."

"Well, well! What a bright little girl you are! And which study do you like best?"

"Spellin'."

Limits on Natural Vision.

The limit of natural vision varies with elevation, condition of the atmosphere, intensity of illumination and other modifying elements. On a clear day an object one foot above a level plain may be seen at a distance of 1.31 miles; one 10 feet in height, 4.15 miles; one 20 feet high, 5.86 miles; one 100 feet high, 13.1 miles; one a mile high (as the top of a mountain,) 95.23 miles. This allows 7 inches, or, to be more exact, 6.99 inches to the mile for the curvature of the earth, and assumes that the size and illumination of the object is sufficient to produce an image.

A Tremendous Rumpus

In the system is produced by a disorderly liver. Bile gets into the blood and gives a saffron tinge to the countenance and eye-balls, sick headaches ensue, the digestive organs are thrown out of gear, the bowels become costive, there are pains through the right side and shoulder blade, the breath grows sour and the tongue furred, dizziness is frequent, especially on rising suddenly. This state of affairs could not exist unless the disturbance were a serious one. Yet it is easily remediable with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which relieves every symptom of biliousness and indigestion, and promotes a regular action of the bowels, and is auxiliary of appetite and sleep. The Bitters is a superb specific for malarial and kidney trouble, rheumatism and debility. A wineglassful thrice a day.

The Moustache Trainer.

A moustache trainer is one of the latest devices for aiding the attractiveness of the human visage. It is an elastic, curved strip of thin metal, at either end of which is secured an adjustable plate, faced on the inner side with soft cloth, in order that the machine may comfortably clasp the ends of the moustache. The latter is carefully arranged at night, or during periods of seclusion, and the trainer fixed upon it. It is asserted that it does not incommode the wearer.

"GIVE THANKS."

But a Thanksgiving dinner without good cooking is a hollow mockery. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad Company, whose dining-car service between Indianapolis and Cincinnati, is famous for good cooking, have issued a special edition of the Martha Washington cook-book, 320 pages, fully illustrated, which will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of 10 cents in stamps. This cook-book is the best in the market. The C., H. & D. is also the best road between Indianapolis and Cincinnati, with five trains a day each way, and chair-cars on four of them. Send 10 cents to E. O. McCormick, G. P. & T. Agt., Cincinnati, Ohio, and get a cook-book free.

She Knew.

A new instance, borrowed from Tid-Bits, of the danger incident to leading questions: The minister's wife was laboring with a delinquent member of the village industrial school.

"Eliza Jane," she said, "I am sorry to hear from your teacher that you are not diligent at your needle work. Don't you know who it is that finds work for idle hands to do?"

DON'T give up and say there is no help for Catarrh, Hay Fever, and Cold in the head, since thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them.

I HAVE been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years; I had lost sense of smell entirely, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as fine a needle as ever I did; my sense of smell seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for catarrh.—Mrs. E. E. Grimes, Rendrill, Perry Co., Ohio.

IN OLDEN TIMES

People overlooked the importance of permanently beneficial effects and were satisfied with transient action, but now that it is generally known that Syrup of Figs will permanently cure habitual constipation, well-informed people will not buy other laxatives, which act for a time, but finally injure the system.

"August Flower"

"For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. He finally, after trying everything, said my stomach was worn out, and that I would have to cease eating solid food. On the recommendation of a friend I procured a bottle of August Flower. It seemed to do me good at once. I gained strength and flesh rapidly. I feel now like a new man, and consider that August Flower has cured me."

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any HAS one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and CURED could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. THOUSANDS You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Grade examinations are being held this week in our schools.

Tod Wilden has removed his stock of bankrupt goods to Fremont.

Thus far we hear of no Thanksgiving services in Waterloo this year.

Mrs. W. H. Leas made a short visit to Auburn on Tuesday of this week

Scott Loutzenheiser does not improve, but seems to steadily grow weaker.

Lisle Smith has been sick for over a week with catarrhal fever; is some better.

A. J. Sinclair and wife are keeping house in the John Sinclair property on west side of Washington st.

The repairs and changes made on the U. B. church are completed, and services were held there Sunday morning.

Some of our ladies have commenced raising silk worms, with the intention of engaging in the silk interest to a limited extent.

Sheriff Plum moved over from Auburn last week Monday. He and his wife are settled in thier new home on South Wayne st.

Dr. Darby brought his wife from Battle Creek, Mich, last week Monday. She seemed so low at that time as to almost preclude hope, but rests easier, and to all appearance is improving.

The Bordeaux Brothers gave an exhibition of bicycle riding at the opera house Tuesday evening of this week. They claim to be the champion fancy, trick and comic bicycle riders of the world.

Uncle Jerry Plum brought a chicken up to Phil Plum's Tuesday, on killing it, it was found to have two gizzards, both in active use, and full of food. It must have been a democratic rooster. They seem to be gobbling up everything now-a days.

The democrats of Waterloo and vicinity had planned and were making arrangements to celebrate their victory in the late presidential election, last Saturday evening, but on account of those who are sick, Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Darby, who might be unfavorably affected by the music, they abandoned it. This was a noble act, that showed good taste and should be appreciated by all.

BUTLER.

Mr. Johnson, one of Butler's well known barbers was buried last week.

Rev Tedrow will deliver the Thanksgiving sermon at the Church of God.

The Lyon Comedy Co. held the boards at Hirschler's Opera House last week to rather slim houses.

The ladies of the M. E. church will give a Thanksgiving dinner in the church parlors on that day.

Our town board are putting down flagstone crossings in place of the wooden ones that are wearing out.

Among the strange events of recent occurrence was the marriage of Robert Arford and Mrs Sybilla (Crise) Shatto.

Al Livergood has succeeded George Dunn at the Wabash restaurant. Mr. Dunn goes back to the saloon bussiness.

The Free Methodists have finally secured a footing in Butler. They will occupy the church of God for the present

Misses Lizzie and Neva Champion, of Angola, sisters of Mrs J. A Campbell visited with Butler friends over Sunday.

Mrs. Mitchell, one of our old city residents is in very poor health Mother Reese, another of the old and well known residents is also very ill.

Through the illness of one of Rev. Stone's children at Elkhart, where they were visiting, the M E pulpit was unexpectedly vacant last Sabbath.

The new foundry is about completed, and will soon be in operation, The manufacturing company will then put in a much larger force, and make an effort to make the business more profitable.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Kate Hilt is slowly improving.

John Strack of Vanwert, Ohio, was in town last Saturday.

Aunty Betsey Yethers has been sick the past week but is better.

Katie Fetters expects to start Monday, to Kansas to visit her sister this winter.

Theresa Shiffli who has been at home a few weeks, returned to Angola, Monday.

Lydia Smith of Cadilac, Mich, is here with her mother, Mrs Kate Hilt, who has been sick for some time.

Mrs. John Faxter who has been at Battle Creek, Mich, under the doctor's care the past two weeks returned home last Tuesday. She is slowly improving Fair Stockholders' Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that there will be a meeting of the stockholders of the Auburn District Fair in the Gandy Hall on Saturday Nov. 26, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. A full attendance is earnestly requested and especially all directors are requested to be present.

J. L. DAVIS, Pres. CAL. HUSSELMAN, Sec'y.

Teachers Examination.

The schools of the county are now all supplied with teachers, and there are three licensed teachers ready to fill any vacancies that may occur, and the Teachers Association meeting the last Friday and Saturday of the month, there will be no examination this month—November.

Literary Notes.

The next article in the famous series of "Capitals of the World," now running in Harper's Weekly, will be a graphic description of life and society in the city of Washington, written by Henry Loomis Nelson, and attractively illustrated by C. S. Reinhart. It will appear in the number of the weekly published November 23.

The Whistling Entertainment.

It was better than can be told though there was not a very great turnout of the people to hear it for the weather was bad. But those who were present will never forget it. It was so unlike anything we have ever had here—we mean the whistling part. Miss McManis is a wonder, or rather this singular gift is wonderful. She herself is a lady of fine presence, very graceful, dignified and at the same time pretty. We believe no one who saw her will deny these good words. But the wonder and attraction was her whistling. It can hardly be called whistling, however, if we take for our standard the usual masculine whistle with its harsh shrill quality and careless execution. Her whistling was more like the trilling song of the birds. Indeed, we believe no bird can equal her for she can do all that a bird can and by far exceed her feathered competitors in the great variety of the work she undertakes and all of which she accomplishes. The most skillful of the forest songsters would have found himself entranced by her trills and warbling and would have owned her his superior. The audience were in raptures and at every appearance she was called back. She has a wonderful gift, natural to a certain extent, we presume, and now made more perfect by cultivation and careful practice. There seems to be some peculiar quality of the lips that enables her to control and modulate the sounds she creates. Perhaps by much practice she has brought the nerves and muscles of the lips to a high state of cultivation or perfection, or whatever it may be called She seems to have as perfect control of her lips and cheeks in whistling as the trained singer has of the organs of voice and music. There is not much use to speculate as to how she does all this. It is enough to say and know that she does it; but to realize all there is in this strange gift, one must, as we said, see and hear. Her sister helps her in these entertainments, being a highly accomplished pianist. Her playing was well appreciated and she was also called back. Both are accomplished and very pleasant young ladies. But there were other features of the entertainment that are worthy of commendation, we mean the part taken by home talent. Miss Hartman never did better than with the "Chariot Race" from Ben Hur, though she has given it before. It was a marvel of elocutionary work and the "picture" which she compelled all to see, was more exciting than any real race that could have been put before those who listened to her and watched her. It was grand. Then there was a fine piano solo by Miss Hoffman, who always plays well and the audience had hoped there would have been a piece on the church organ by her, but the program was so full we presume it was overlooked. Mrs. Cuppy and Mrs. Bert Robbins sang a sweet duet and sang excellently too. Morris Widney sang a solo, one of those strong pieces of melody that suits so well his wonderful voice. Of course he was cheered and the audience tried to call him back, but failed. There was also a fine quartet sung by Mrs. Yesbera, Miss Hartman, Mr. Scott and Mr. Widney. Of course this was good, and they all did better even than usual. Dr. Buchtel gave a splendid violin solo, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Garwood. They were called back by enthusiastic cheering and the audience were gratified by another selection. We cannot avoid repeating that our home talent scored a grand success and assisted the two ladies greatly in pleasing the intelligent audience that braved the storm to hear them. Few better entertainments are ever seen here and few towns have as fine local talent as Auburn.

A Jollification.

The evening was cold and raw, but on Saturday night, the democrats had made up their minds to jollify, and nothing would stop them of course. Charlie Rugman had brought in three large sycamore gums, and a lot of rails. One was put up at the north east corner of the public square, one at the northwest and one at the southwest, These were lighted as soon as it was dark, and became the centers of light, heat and noise, as the evening wore on. Many business rooms and residences were tastefully decorated. Among them we remember the dwellings of D. D. Moody, Dr. Nusbaum, Dr. Matheny, A. J. Ralston, Mrs. S. W. Ralston, Mr. Swineford, Mr. Coffinberry, Mr. Merica, L. J. Miller, Frank Borst, W. J. Wallace, J. A. Barns, W. B. Brown, M. Boland, Mrs. Little, John Robbins, Wm. McIntyre, Judge McClellan, Rob. McClellan, Charlie Picker, Eli Weaver, D Z. Hoffman, Geo. V. Schaab, Col. Watson, James Gilliland, D. Y. Husselman, J. F. Aber, Mrs. Schnell, and I. M Zent, for Mrs' Zent being a thorough democrat, did not propose to let her neighbors have the fun all to themselves. The Sheriff's dwelling in the jail was also illuminated, as was also John Hebel's residence.

There were no doubt many others that we did not get. The decorations were usually Chinese lanterns, with the windows filled with blazing candles, pictures of Cleveland, Mrs. Cleveland and of Stevenson. And there was a monster picture of Cleveland furnished by Obe Cool, made by his painter, Mr. Potter, and having a big "Hurrah" painted on This was stood up on the public square and attracted a great deal of notice.

Of the business rooms, the most elaborate and expensive, was Kiblinger's hardware the great corner window of which shone out with a great display of incandescent lights so arranged as to read "Grover" making a lovely and unique display that attracted crowds of admirers all the evening. Above, around the two fronts of the COURIER office its eleven large windows shone with rows of lighted candles, making a very pretty picture. It was also, bright with national flags. But second to none, was the lovely window of the Thomas bakery, full of flags beautifully draped about pictures of Cleveland, etc. The same may be said of Frank Hoff's grocery, next door west. Here we notice pictures of Cleveland and Stevenson, and of Mrs. Cleveland, all nicely draped, while above were two relics of the campaign of '84, Cleveland and Hendricks—two names and faces, that democrats will not soon forget. Aside from these, and the bonfires, there was an abundance of red light, etc. And then the horns! Old and young, girls and boys, blew and tooted and blared, till the hearers were almost crazy. But it was all so good-natured, that no one seemed offended, and the enjoyment, such as it was went on till after nine o'clock. One happy pair had a horn about ten feet long, and so large, that it took two to carry it, the rear man doing the tooting. Then there was the nail keg with its leather head and rosined string; the other racket-producing machines, and the cheering. There was no speaking of course, for even the band in the big wagon could not be heard, and the drum band, drummed in vain. Above the din, the little cannon belonging to the Auburn Machine Works boys, spoke out in thunder tone that compelled one to hear, and sent its echoes into the surrounding country. Some one on the bottom helped out by firing heavy charges of dynamite. A procession was started, but soon broke into a dozen parts, the big traction engine going one way, the bands another, and John W. Thomas, the "lone fisherman" with his balky donkey going another. And that donkey was a sort of infant industry, that had to be petted up and boosted along, for he wouldn't go. So they hitched a strong horse ahead of him, and pulled him around town, to his evident disgust. The crowd was not large, for it was too cold, but the noise and fun were large enough to make it up. And as far as we know, it all passed off pleasantly, several republicans being present and enjoying the fun with the rest.

Dedication.

The dedicatorial services of the Maple Grove U B church on Waterloo circuit took place Nov. 20th, Bishop Wright of Dayton, Ohio, officiating. The church house is a neat substantial building, brick veneer 34x46 with belfry and bell and arch ceiling; the windows are gothic with colored glass The church is neatly finished with two large stoves; four nice Victor lamps, three pulpit chairs and organ; the aisles and rostrum are neatly carpeted. The entire cost of the house including lot, $2,929 84 There has been paid in cash and on subscription $2,574-84 leaving an indebtedness of $355 After a very able and soul stirring discourse from the Bishop to a large audience, he called for $375 to free the house from indebtedness The people responded nobly with $463, after which the house was formally given to God. Much credit is due to the trustees for their untiring efforts in erecting the building. and to the former pastor, Rev J. M. McMillon The members of our own and those of other churches and many non-professors gave very freely C. A Frantz who erected the building did his work well and is a faithful, honest workman, The Bishop preached on Saturday evening and also Sabbath evening from which we received much encouragement and may the dear Lord bless him in his declining years, and the many friends and neighbors that gave of their means to aid us in this work, and may we all meet in heaven.

A Remarkable Discovery.

A remarkable discovery is one of the chronic proclamations of advertisers. Cubeb Cough Cure is not such, it is an established remedy with known merit, made on scientific principles by experienced and able chemists. It affords instant relief, and is called the one minute remedy, for it stops coughing at once, does not cure but gives temporary relief to consumptives, and absolutely cures all other affections of the throat, lungs, etc. For croup, whooping cough and colds of children Cubeb Cough Cure is valuable. A Wonderful Statement.

Proprietors of Dullam's Great German Remedies. Gentlemen:—I have for the past two years been troubled with a serious and very severe liver and stomach difficulty. Have had advice and medicine from our very best physicians and only to be temporarily relieved. Some of my friends persuaded me to try your Great German remedy for the blood, stomach and kidneys and to my surprise after using three bottles I feel like a new man. If you desire you can use my name in print or by reference in any of the Grand Rapids, Mich., papers, or any other papers in the states, to convince the afflicted that it is the best blood, liver and kidney medicine on earth. I feel like a new man. Have lived here over 40 years. $1 a bottle.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

An Open Letter.

TO THE PUBLIC,—

Only a short time now remains until CHRISTMAS, and naturally you begin to think about what you are going to buy for presents. In addition to a general line of every-day hardware, we have a large assortment of goods that would make good and useful presents; and the prices——?!!? Well, they will be so low as to astonish you.

An attempt to tell you all, or to describe the many things which we will offer you, would be futile; hence, we ask you to call and see for yourselves. No trouble to show goods and give prices. We might mention a few things. Will offer a line of Novelties, ranging in price from 10 cents to 25 cents, each, pair or set. In Silverware, we just "beat 'em all."

We can't do justice to the subject, so will not attempt any further desdription, but again asking you to call and see for yourselves, assuring you of rare bargains, and thanking you all for past patronage and endeavoring by fair dealing to merit a continuance of the same, We remain,

Yours very truly,

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1866—Continued.

Rev. S. B. Ward, active and enterprising in religious concerns, had conducted a series of night meetings with good results. Davoid of sectarian teaching, he had invited the co operation of all denominations and the revival was productive of much benefit in heightening the moral tone of the community and strengthening the adherence of christian people in their faith and practice.

Rev. C, A. Evans, of South Bend occasionally occupied the pulpit of the Presbyterian church and Rev. Emanuel Hale served the churches of Auburn and Waterloo to the acceptance of both congregations.

The officers of Auburn Lodge No 116 at this time were Thomas D. Gross N. G., Samuel Wise, V. G., Henry Altenberg, .R S., John Butt, treasurer and William H. Dills, permanent secretary, and this fact is narrated as a startling lesson of the brevity of life, since of them all, so far as we have information, none now survive of these once familiarly known and enterprising citizens.

In this connection, it may be stated that on May 7th the town board had sold to Whedon W. Griswold for $380.00, the tract purchased from C. S. Hare for a burial place and soon thereafter, Mr. Griswold proceeded to have the ground surveyed and platted into suitable blocks. A quarter of a century has sufficed to occupy all that space with the remains of loved and lost ones and there are few of the long resident families in our town but have one or more of those missing from the home circle buried there.

For years we have seen Auburn embarassed by lack of facilities for outside communication. It was easy to show what should be done to change these conditions to bring prosperity, but efforts still failed and plans most promising were frustrated. In February, encouraging news was received relative to the resumption of work on and completion of the Logansport & Northern Indiana railroad. The directors had held a meeting and elected the usual officers. A Dr. Smith who was then chosen president, expressed his intention to hold meetings at points along the line of the road, to arouse and inform the people. He also, purposed to push measures for an early resumption of operations.

Bonds were authorized and issued to the amount of $1,500,000.00 to provide means for construction. The company were negotiating for rails; the chief engineer, Mr. Mercher was set to work to secure right of way through tracts of land not hitherto obtained and in full belief of remunerative advantages, there were strong hopes that by autumn, work would have so far been matured that contracts to complete grading the road would be begun.

But the time had not yet come and during a part of the year the dirt roads which formed the only avenues of communication became so bad as to place an actual embargo on travel and left the county seat practically isolated.

Large sums in the aggregate, under the caption of road revenue, had been assessed to the various townships and towns of the county and worked out at the discretion and convenience of the farmers with varying effects upon the highways proportioned to the skill of the supervisor and the public spirit of people, and, to facilitate intercourse, the county commissioners authorized bridges to be built over streams to expedite travel. As an instance, a contract was let on April 14, to William Valleau, the lowest bidder, for $5700 for the construction of a bridge across the St. Joe river at Newville: The amount attests the earnest desire of the people for improvements and their willingness to be taxed to provide the necessary funds.

There were a few leading citizens whose unflagging determination about this time seemed to promise an innovation in highways and a good road between the towns of Auburn and Waterloo. In December, a company was organized at the county seat, to be known as "The Auburn and Waterloo City Plank Road Company,"

The name sufficiently indicated the purpose of the association. Messrs. J. L. Worden, S. W. Ralston, Edward Eldridge, L. Rainier and L J. Blair were chosen directors. A petition was presented to the board of county commissioners in regular session asking the use of the existing highway between the towns and this request was granted on the reasonable condition that the purposed improvement should be begun within a year and completed within two years.

The project having reached this stage fell through as many another has done but it was a move in the right direction, that had it been consummated would long ere this have resulted in a gravel road of which the plank roads were precursers and it would have changed the character of road work, now a reproach to the community, a fruitless labor and, at times, a detriment to travel.

There was one satisfaction amidst adverse surroundings in the great numbers of valuable forest trees still preserved and gradually coming into notice and demand for purposes of manufacture. A serious drawback began to present itself as a possible help. On farms near Auburn and occupying many acres of lands stood thousands of magnificent erees that had enhanced in value with the progress of time and were seen to constitute a strong reserve for supply of the coming manufacturer as well as a needed revenue to the owners. The convenience of this splendid material, together with its abundance and the profits possible for parties locating here, began to be advertised and this hitherto neglected field attracted attention, at first with inconsiderable results, later to a degree profitable to directly interested parties and highly favorable to the welfare of the town.

In narration of earlier history attention was called to the astonishing number of deer that had their home in the woods of all this region but the deer and the deer slayers save in rare exceptions have passed away. It would be difficult to determine who killed the first deer in DeKalb county but early in the morning of Nov. 5, 1866, Mr. Osbun and son killed five deer near their farm in Jackson township and these were the last of that noble game which had contributed so much to the scanty fare of the pioneers of the county. The saddles were brought to Auburn and sold at 12 to 15 cents per pound, furnishing a rarity and a final treat to purchasers.

Grover Cleveland, President-Elect

[Harper's Weekly.]

The nomination of Mr. Cleveland as a candidate for the Presidency by the National Democratic Convention in June last was in its way the most extraordinary event in our political history. A majority of the "practical" politicians of his party opposed him, because they honestly thought that because his aims and methods were unsympathetic to them, partly he could not be elected. That opposition was carried on in the Convention with especial fierceness by the regular delegation from his own state, who loudly proclaimed that his nomination meant inevitable defeat of the party in the election. But all this resistance, which according to every political tradition, would have been fatal to any man ever so popular, was borne down by an overpowering pressure of public opinion coming from all parts of the country. This opinion was inspired not only by the universal feeling that in the struggle against the policy of high protection Mr. Cleveland was the logical leader, but also by the confidence reposed in his character as a man by all the classes of the people. According to the testimony of the most expert democratic politicians, Mr. Cleveland's nomination was a foregone conclusion when the Chicago Convention met. And as the result has amply demonstrated, his election was a foregone conclusion as soon as the nomination was made. The same influences that compelled the nomination of Mr. Cleveland effected his election; popular approval of the tariff-reform policy he represented, and popular trust in the man.

We are very far from wishing to belittle the services rendered by any one in the struggle. The democratic party managers conducted the campaign with excellent judgment, energy and dignity. Eloquent speakers and able writers are entitled to much praise for their persuasive arguments and stirring appeals. Tammany Hall even deserves credit for faithfully redeeming its promise to support Mr. Cleveland in the election after having opposed his nomination, and the same credit is due to the politicians of the same way of thinking throughout the country, who, although disliking Cleveland, loyally performed what they considered their duty as party men. But, while all this is true, none of these persons or classes can justly pretend that Mr. Cleveland owes his election to them, in the sense that without their especial aid he would not have succeeded. His majority is so large that he would have been elected if Tammany Hall and the state of New York had gone against him. He might have lost several Southern states and still been elected. The campaign managers might have done their work ever so blunderingly, and yet the overwhelming popular current would have carried him through. There is no one orator and no newspaper writer whose efforts might not have been spared without the slightest danger to Mr. Cleveland's chances. All this is amply proven by the fact that in states which were given up as lost by the democrats, and in which scarcely any work was done, the democratic gains over the vote of 1888 are as great as those in the states most assiduously cared for. Neither can it be said that Mr. Cleveland was aided by the prestige of his party, for nobody will deny that the performances of the democratic majority in the last session of congress rather diminished than increased popular confidence in democratic statesmanship In short, Mr. Cleveland, owing his election to the popular strength of his cause and the popular confidence inspired by his character, is not indebted for his success to any man or set of men. No gratitude is due him except to a large majority of the American people. He is free to serve the people according to the dictates of his conscience and his good sense, entirely unembarassed by any sort of private obligation. No president in American history except Washington could enter upon the duties of his high office with a prouder sense of independence and a stronger assurance of being trusted by the people.

The Duluth and Superior Special.

In full keeping with its well known progressive policy the North Western Line (Chicago & Northwestern Railway), has recently inaugurated through train service between Chicago and the Lake Superior region. This new train is known as the "Duluth and Superior Special," and it leaves Chicago daily at 5:50 p. m., arriving at Superior at 8:20 a. m. and Duluth at 8:52 a. m, the next day, making the journey in the remarkably quick time of fifteen hours. The train is made up of baggage cars, standard day coaches and palace buffet sleeping cars of the most modern and approved design, and all classes of passengers are carried through without change of cars. Supper is served in dining car after departure from Chicago, and breakfast is served from a well stocked buffet before arrival at Duluth. To insure yourself a quick and comfortable journey be sure and ask for tickets via the North Western Line. Any tickt agent can furnish full information regarding this railway or it will be promptly furnished upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and ticket agent. Chicago. 8

Mr. Howells' Future Plans.

While Mr. Howells will not, during 1893, confine his literary work to any single periodical, it may be authoritatively announced that he has entered into contract with The Ladies' Home Journal whereby his most important work will, for some time to come, first see print in the pages of that magazine. His new novel, "The Coast of Bohemia," begins in the Christmas issue of the Journal, and immediately upon its close Mr. Howells will begin in the magazine a series of editorial autobiographical papers, in which he will trace the influences which led him to a literary life, his course of reading and his favorite authors and books. The articles will practically tell the story of the famous novelist's life, and promise to possess in a rare degree that attractive interest which always attaches itself to the life of a successful man when told by himself. Howells had his early struggles; his early resources were few, and these he will trace among other things in these articles, describing, too, how he mastered four different languages to acquaint himself with the literature of the countries most attractive to him.

OUR GIFT TO EVERY ONE OF OUR READERS.

"A Yard of Pansies."

By special arrangement with the Publishers, we are enabled to make every one of our readers a present of one of these exquisite Oil Pictures 36 inches long, a companion to "A Yard of Roses," which all have seen and admired. This exquisite picture "A Yard of Pansies," was painted by the same noted artist who did the, "Roses." It is the same size, and is pronounced by art critics to far superior to the "Roses." The reproduction is equal in every respect to the original, which cost $300, and accompanying it are full directions for framing at home, at a cost of a few cents, thus forming a beautiful ornament for your parlor or a superb Christmas Gift, worth at least $5. Send your name and address to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York, with three two-cent stamps to pay for the packing, mailing, etc., and mention that you are a reader of the COURIER and you will receive by return mail one of these valuable works of art.

Death of Dr. Scott, the President's Father-in-Law—Families of Homestead Strikers Starving—Mexican Cabinet Resigns—A Family Frightfully Burned.

MORE GRIEF

For President Harrison and Family.

Washington special: The Rev. Dr. John Witherspoon Scott, the venerable father-in-law of President Harrison, died at the age of 93 years. He died in the Executive Mansion, where he went with his daughter and son-in-law when they made it their home. Dr. Scott's illness was of short duration. He went to Indianapolis with the party that accompanied Mrs. Harrison's remains. He bore the fatigue of the trip very well and returned to Washington in his usual health. On Saturday, Nov. 18, he caught cold and was compelled to go to bed, and place himself under the doctor's care.

The Rev. John W. Scott, father-in-law of President Harrison, was born with the century, the date of his birth being January 22, 1800, little more than a month after the death of George Washington. His boyhood was spent in the vicinity of Hookstown, Beaver county, Pa., where he was born. His father was a well-to-do resident of that place, and gave to his son a good education, which he turned to advantage in his future life. He became a minister of the Presbyterian church and filled several pulpits acceptably, but in a few years his health failed and he was forced to give up his vocation. After teaching in several schools, among them the Hanover University in Hanover County, Ind., he established the Western Female Seminary at Oxford, O. Here was situated Miami University, where Benjamin Harrison received the finishing touches to his education.

IT IS EPIDEMIC.

Highwaymen Rob a New Jersey Bank.

A most daring bank robbery occurred in Allentown, Warmouth County, New Jersey. Two young men entered the Farmers' National Bank, and with drawn revolvers demanded all the cash on hand. Cashier Hutchison and an assistant were the only employes of the bank present at the time. A weapon was held at the head of each, and one of the robbers backed up this forcible demand with the words, "We'll blow both your heads off if you don't turn all your stuff up at once." Cashier Hutchison quickly complied with this request and handed over about $2,000 which lay on the table before him. Then one of the robbers compelled the cashier and the clerk to go to the wall and turn their heads, while the other robber walked backwards out of the door and into the street. His accomplice quickly followed. In a moment the chashier's courage returned and he and the clerk rushed out into the street firing at the fleeing thieves. The noise attracted a crowd and the robbers were captured about two blocks from the bank. They gave their names as J. B. Morris and Frederick Smith, and were at once removed to Freehold jail. The money given them by Cashier Hutchinson was recovered.

Mr. Porter's Report.

Superintendent Porter, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, again recommends that the census office be made a permanent bureau of the Government. From the beginning of the eleventh census up to the fiscal year, June 30, 1892, the total disbursements for the service amounted to $8,203,693, a portion of which was for pay of enumerators: $2,495,488, farms, homes, and mortgages $1,005,771; census proper, $663,562; manufactures, $648,379; printing and stationery, $631,686. Since July, 1891, the number of clerks on the roll of the offices has been reduced from 2,330 to 1,214 and by the beginning of the new year the employes will not exceed 1,000. It is estimated that $240,000 will be required to run the office from March to June 30, 1893.

In Love with Grover.

Josephine M. Fields, daughter of a colored temperance worker of Ohio, says she is in love with Grover Cleveland, and spends much of her time writing letters to him. The other day an inquest of insanity was held. Among the testimony was a letter she had written to Mr. Cleveland announcing her intention of taking a bridal trip to Washington as soon as she received $10 from him. Her home is at Cleveland, Ohio.

Families of Homestead Strikers Starving.

Reports from Homestead are that a majority of the families of the defeated strikers are suffering severely for want of the bare necessities of life. Aid must be forthcoming immediately, as the distressed condition is rapidly becoming more prevalent. Homestead citizens are rendering every possible assistance, but are entirely unable to meet the fast increasing demands.

Mine Horror in Mexico.

Eighteen miners have been killed by a cave-in at the Borda mine at Pachuca, Mexico.

A Family Frightfully Burned.

At Jackson, Mich., Mrs. Walter Bullinger, her daughter, Josie, and her 16-monthes-old child, were fearfully burned by the explosion of gasoline as the mother was lighting a stove to prepare supper. Josie will die, and the baby was probably fatally burned. Mrs. Bullinger's burns, while dangerous, are not considered fatal.

The Fitzsimmons-Hall Fight.

The Crescent City Club of New Orleans has fixed the Fitzsimmons-Hall fight for February 16.

Nihilists Active in Russia.

The correspondent of the London Chronicle at St. Petersburg says that the nihilists are distributing inflammatory pamphlets and letters among the peasantry near the Volga, inciting them to revolt against the government. The police are instructed to seize all such literature.

Foot-Ball Battles.

In the Boston-Chicago foot-ball game at Chicago the Bostons were victorious, and Yale beat Princeton at New York. The Boston-Chicago game was one-sided, but the Yale-Princeton contest was probably the most stubbornly contested in the history of the game in this country.

WRECKED BY DYNAMITE.

Terrific Revenge of Three Chinese Laundrymen—Necktie Party Possible.

A Warsaw, Ind., dispatch says: At 9 o'clock last evening an explosion occurred that shook this city from center to circumference. For several years three Chinamen have been running a laundry here. About one month ago Ed Davis came here from Kentucky and started a steam laundry. He had secured a good part of the Chinese trade. Within the last week two attempts have been made to burn Davis' building. Suspicion pointed to the Chinese. They were watched, and last evening, just before the explosion, one of them was seen running toward the depot and has not been seen since. The explosion was caused by a large dynamite bomb being thrown into the building. The entire building was wrecked, valuable machinery smashed, and the sleeping-room of Davis totally demolished. Davis was not in the building at the time. Excitement is high here and everything points to the guilt of all three of the Chinamen. Every effort is being made to find the missing one. His two associates are under a close guard. Lynching has been threatened.

PROTEST AGAINST ELECTION BILLS.

Representative Fitch Desires to Examine Personally Davenport's Accounts.

The Secretary of the Treasury has received a letter from Representative Fitch, Chairman of the special committee investigating election methods, protesting against the payment of any bills of John I. Davenport, Chief Supervisor of Elections at New York, for services or disbursements at the recent election, and requesting that he (Mr. Fitch) be allowed to personally examine such accounts before settlement. The secretary declined to discuss the letter except to say that the communication will receive the same careful attention accorded all communications from Congressional committees. It is learned from another source that Mr. Davenport's accounts for the period in question have not yet been presented to the accounting officers and are not expected for several weeks.

SHIP GOLD TO EUROPE.

Men in Wall Street Speculating on the Fourth National's Intentions.

Indications are that the $600,000 gold withdrawn from the Sub-Treasury by the Fourth National Bank of New York will be shipped to Europe. Great interest is manifested in Wall street over the transaction, as shipments of the yellow metal at this season are most unusual. The trouble is that while this country has been exporting vast amounts of grain and other products, the prices realized have been so low that a heavy balance of trade has piled up against us. At the same time the imports of general merchandize continue on a large scale, partly in consequence of the preparations for the holiday trade. The only thing that will be apt to prevent gold exports on a large scale is a revival of the European demands for American securities.

TOUGHS AND TRAINMEN FIGHT.

Six Desperate Brothers Are Thrown Down an Embankment.

Gallipolis, Ohio, special: Six brothers named Williams, desperate characters, boarded an Ohio River Railroad train at Huntington last night. All were drunk, and they soon precipitated a fight with the conductor and brakeman, whom they cut and beat seriously. The train was stopped, and the engineer and fireman, armed with clubs, took a hand in the affray. Several passengers also assisted, and after a furious fight the Williams brothers were beaten insensible, dragged from the train, and thrown down an embankment. The train then proceeded. It is not known whether any of the desperadoes were fatally hurt or not.

CANADA'S NEW CABINET.

Change Necessitated by the Resignation of the Premier, Sir John Abbott.

Hon. George Foster, Minister of Finance, has left England, carrying in his pocket the resignation of Premier Abbott. This will lead to a reorganization of the Cabinet, and on good authority it is said that the Hon. J. A. Chapleau, Minister of Customs will be made Lieutenant Governor of the province of Quebec, the present holder of the position, Lieutenant Governor Anger, succeeding to the Portfolio of Customs. Sir John Thompson, the present Minister of Justice, will be the Premier, and W. B. Ives, Member of Parliament, will be taken into the Cabinet as Minister of Agriculture. Other changes are likely to be made.

WORKMEN IN DEADLY PERIL.

Coal Mines in New Mexico in Flames—Miners Believed to Have Escaped.

Fire broke out in the Blossburg coal mines, situated four miles south of Raton, N. M. Sixteen mules were burned to death. About one hundred men were at work in the subways in entire ignorance of their peril. A messenger was at once dispatched to the mouth of this shaft, a distance of three miles over the mountain, to notify the miners of their danger, and it is thought that all escaped. The output is seventy-five cars of coal a day. It is thought that the mines will be destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown.

VANDERBILT'S BIG LOSS.

Summer Residence at Newport, with Its Costly Furnishings, Destroyed.

The Breakers, the elegant and costly Newport (R. I.) summer residence of Cornelius Vanderbilt, is a smouldering mass of ruins. Blackened and crumbling walls of brick and heaps of ashes are all that now remain of the palatial villa which for years has been numbered among Newport's largest and finest residences. The loss is $300,000.

May Not Recover.

James G. Blaine lies in his bed critically ill. He may recover and be able to get around again, and he may never leave his bed alive. In either event his physician will not be surprised. Securing information of a reliable character concerning Mr. Blaine is attended by the very greatest difficulty, and one must be content with a general rather than a particular knowledge of his condition. It is simply impossible to obtain any information at the house, for Mrs. Blaine has instructed the servants to say nothing, and she herself will not be interviewed. Mrs. Blaine has also placed a seal on the doctor's lips, and all he can do is to roll his eyes and sigh and shake his head when questioned by newspaper men. But all talk to their friends, and these friends talk to whom they please. According to one of them, a very prominent Government official, Mr. Blaine's condition is serious. The exact nature of his compaint is not known. It started with a cold, which was followed by a fever. But his cold and fever have entirely disappeared, leaving him, however, entirely prostrated. The family regard his condition as the result of a complication of ailments, and they fear that it means the beginning of the end. There is not the slightest doubt that the family is greatly alarmed and apprehensive of the worst.

Put Poison in His Tobacco.

At St. Henry, Minn., Joseph E. Haunder died suddenly. Strychnine was found in his tobacco. The next morning Miss Agnes Beer, his wife's sister, died of the same poison. She left a letter asking to be buried with Haunder. It is supposed that she poisoned herself and Haunder.

Brig Wrecked; Crew Saved.

The brig Charles Purves, from Philadelphia, for Cienfuegos, was totally wrecked at Inagua. The crew are safe.

Profits for Americans.

While the members of the French Chamber of Commerce are investigating the affairs of the Panama Canal Company and incidentally stirring up more mud than ever came from the bottom of the canal itself, it will vastly interest Americans to know that 100,000,000 francs ($20,000,000) of the canal company's money was paid into the hands of a syndicate of American capitalists for work done in the contraction of the canal. There was $10,000,000 profit in the work. The syndicate by which this vast sum was directed through American channels is known as the American Contracting and Dredging Company. Several members of the company made over $2,000,000 each.

GENERAL TRADE GOOD.

Probable Gold Exports Are Not Considered Significant.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

The announcement that gold would be exported, though not in large amount, has not necessarily as much meaning as many supposed. Foreign exchange does not yet justify exports, and movements not warranted may be due to temporary and trifling influences. The condition of business throughout the country appears excellent, with the volume of trade greater than in any previous year.

POEY WILL GO TO PRISON.

To Be Confined Six and One-half Years for Forgery and Larceny.

Simon Poey, passenger agent of the Ward Steamship line, was sentenced at New York to five years in the State prison for forgery in the third degree, and one year and six months for grand larceny in the second degree. Poey stole about $40,000.

To Restrict Immigration.

The protest of the passengers of the steamer Weimar, detained in quarantine, has had little effect upon Secretary of the Treasury Foster. He says the regulations must be enforced strictly, even if hardship is caused in some cases, and believes the Government ought to be as careful and take as many precautions against cholera all during this winter as at any time in the past. The way to reduce the danger from cholera or any other epidemic raging in Europe, Mr. Foster says, is to enact legislation to restrict immigration. He hoped Congress would take immediate action in this line.

To Build the Yerkes Telescope.

Warner & Swasey, of Cleveland, have been awarded the contract for building the new Yerkes telescope for the University of Chicago. They built the famous Lick telescope and the one for the National Observatory at Washington. The Yerkes instrument will have a 40-inch lens, and is expected to exceed the Lick telescope in magnifying power 25 per cent. The tube will be seventy-five feet long, and the instrument completed will weigh six tons. Work will be begun at once, with the expectation of finishing it in a year.

To Lock In the Audience.

The Choral Symphony Society of St. Louis opened its season Friday night. As usual on such occasions during the last chorus many people manifested a vulgar anxiety to get out. This was not complimentary to Miss Emma Juch and her associates. To prevent a recurrence of the annoyance the society decided to lock the doors hereafter until the last number is finished. The public has been notified through local papers.

Driven to Suicide by Madness.

Maggie Hamilton of Killanning Pa., was taken ill with typhoid fever. While in her delirium she fled from the house in her night robes. Shortly afterward her absence was discovered. Judge Rayburn, C. E. Hileman and others organized a searching party. About an hour afterward the young woman's body was found in the river. She was a teacher in the public schools of Allegheny, Pa.

Indian Child Killed by a Panther.

At Hopkins, a Cherokee outlet trading post, a panther killed an Indian child. The beast's cries had been heard for several nights, but none of the few inhabitants had the courage to attempt to kill it. Shortly after the child was killed, however, William Simmons, an old Indian scout, turned up, and he followed and killed the brute. The animal measured seven feet from nose to tip of tail.

Women Use Hot Water as a Weapon.

Near Piedmont, Ala., three brothers named Conner were arrested by T. V. Jackson, an express detective, aided by local officers and a posse. They report a desperate fight with women armed with hot water. The captives are thought to be the trio who robbed the mail and express cars of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad near Piedmont about a month since.

Fed Their Limbs to Hogs.

Henry Banks, a colored Clarksville, Ark., farmer, who had been absent from home, returned and found his wife talking to Joseph Perry, a neighbor. The enraged husband pulled out a razor and literally carved them to pieces, cutting the limbs of the victoms from their bodies and throwing them in the hog pen. The murderer escaped, but a posse is in pursuit.

Bank Robbers Run Down.

Three of the five robbers who robbed the Roslyn, Wash., bank of $10,000 Sept. 24 were captured Friday in the Cascade Mountains in the central part of Oregon. The prisoners have been fully identified by the bank officials. They are believed to be the same men who robbed the banks at the Dalles and La Grande, Oregon, during the past year.

To Raise Money for Mrs. Randall.

The Samuel J. Randall Club, of St. Louis, has been reorganized to raise a fund for the benefit of Mrs. Randall. Already money is being subscribed.

IN THE LOWER HOUSE.

AN INTERESTING STUDY OF ITS PERSONNEL.

How It Compares with Its Predecessor—In Numbers and Talent the Republicans Gain While the Democrats Lose—Old Members Returned.

From the Capital.

Washington correspondence:

The lower house of the Fifty-third Congress will have a decided Democratic majority, yet the Republicans by the recent election gained more than they lost in numbers and talent, while the Democrats lost many old and experienced members. In the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress there are 235 Democrats, 88 Republicans and 9 Farmers' Alliance men, making a total of 332 members. In the Fifty-third Congress the total membership will be 356, a gain of 24 under the reapportionment of the new census. It is impossible yet to state definitely the relative strength of each party in the House, because in many districts the official count will be necessary to determine accurately the result. From the returns already received, however, it is evident that the Democrats will have in round numbers 220 members, the Republicans 130, and the Populists and Independents the remaining 6. With such a working majority as this the Democrats will be able to enact any legislation they choose on the tariff or any other question; and as the Senate will also have a Democratic majority, the party will be entirely responsible for whatever legislation is sent to President Cleveland for his signature.

A study of the personnel of the newly elected House shows that remarkably few changes have been made in its membership, considering the fact that the Representatives were voted for at a Presidential election, when men of both parties are naturally more anxious for nominations than in so-called off years. There have been comparatively few men of conspicuous ability or striking personality in the lower house during the past few years, and the Fifty-second Congress was especially lacking in big men. The new Congress gains little if anything by the changes resulting from the elections, and the Democrats have failed to make up in ability what they have lost in the failure of old and capable members to be renominated or re-elected. The Republicans, on the other hand, in proportion to their total number, will have more men of real ability and parliamentary experience than the Democrats.

Losses and Gains.

The Democrats will still have such strong men as Speaker Crisp, Judge Holman, Springer, the Breckinridges, Bynum of Indiana, Bourke Cockran, Amos Cummings, Col. Fellows, Harter of Ohio, McMillin of Tennessee, Rayner of Maryland, and Blanchard of Louisiana; but they have lost Blount of Georgia, Herbert and Forney of Alabama, Hemphill of South Carolina, Hoar and Williams of Massachusetts, and others. The three first named have served long years in Congress, and are possessed of valuable knowledge and experience, which will be missed by their constituents and their colleagues in committees and on the floor of the House.

The Republicans lost none of their leaders, and the apt debaters, shrewd legislators, and skillful parliamentarians that make up the little band who have stood so gallantly by their dethroned Czar during the sessions of the present Democratic House are all returned, and will continue to follow the brilliant, if erratic and fateful, leadership of Tom Reed.

Among the members of the Fifty-second Congress who were noted above their fellows for some peculiar trait of character, personal appearance, or incident in life, and whose names will no longer be heard in the roll call, are Kittle Halvorsen, the Norwegian Alliance and Prohibition member from Minnesota; the venerable Leonidas M. Miller, of Wisconsin, who, as he sat in the front row, his bald head bobbing over his spectacles, bore a striking resemblance to Pickwick, who was born in Greece, the son of a fighting chieftain, who left him on the battlefield after a fierce fight with the Turks. Sherman Hoar and George Fred Williams, of Massachusetts, who wept when Mills was defeated in the speakership caucus, and refused forsooth to vote for Crisp in the House; "Tom" Watson, of Georgia, who wrote a book to prove that his colleagues in Congress were drunkards, and "the three Taylors," all from Ohio, and all Republicans. There will only be two Taylors in the new House as against five in the old. One is from Indiana and the other is from Texas. There will be two Smiths only, George W., from Pennsylvania, and Marcus A., a delegate from Arizona.

His Last Official Days.

Mr. Harrison will get his last month's pay on February 28 or 29 in the shape of a draft issued on a warrant signed as usual by the Secretary of the Treasury and sent over to the White House by a messenger. The amount of this draft would be $4,166.67, but four days' extra pay will be added for March. On the evening of March 3 he will go to the Capitol, where he will seat himself at the big table in the center of the President's room. This is said to be the handsomest room in the world, but the Chief Magistrate of the nation only uses it once in two years. It has a velvet carpet with a pile so deep that the footsteps of one who walks upon it are noiseless. The furniture is covered with red leather, and the ceiling is frescoed in the highest style of art. Mr. Harrison will take a chair between two great mirrors, which so throw back each other's reflections that looking in either direction, he can see an interminable line of his own images extending out of sight. Up to midnight he will be occupied in hurriedly signing bills, in order that they may become laws before the expiration of the Fifty-second Congress. It will be his last night of power. The next day he becomes a private citizen, with no more control over public affairs than a newly naturalized foreigner.

In 1808 the Phœnix was regularly running on the Delaware.

Woolf built the first double-cylinder expansion engine in 1804.

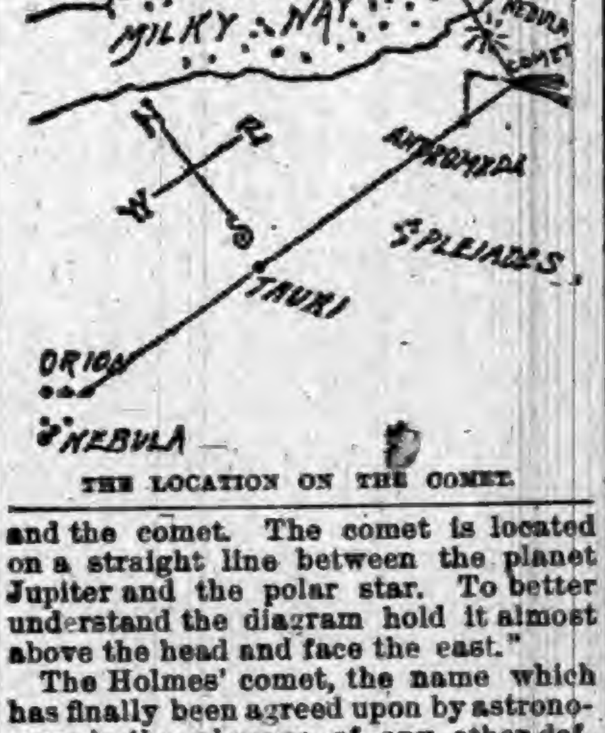
In 1865, 250 railroad incorporation bills passed by Parliament.

HOW TO FIND THE NEW COMET.

Astronomer Hale Gives Some Points to the Lay Observer.

Thousands of well-meaning people are trying every night to see the much-talked-about comet and fail to discover it. It may be seen by the unaided eye if directed at the right point. A common opera-glass turned on the Pleiades will reveal it more distinctly. To assist the ordinary observer Astronomer Hale has made a diagram that will aid in locating the vagrant comet. He has omitted the lesser stars and indicated the comet by lines drawn through the fixed stars and constellations. For good measure the nebula of Andromeda has been thrown into the diagram.

"This bright spot near the milky way," Prof. Hale says, "is easily mistaken for the comet itself and might assist in finding the wanderer. Beginning with the first star in the belt of Orion—and the belt may be located by the three bright stars close together and in a straight line—draw an imaginary line with the eye passing through Touri, a little to the left and a little below the Pleiades; miss the Pleiades and run the line through the principal star of Andromeda as far beyond Touri as Touri is beyond Orion, then carry the line a little farther and find the comet. If this is not complicated, taking the big star in Andromeda and make the base of a right angle triangle with the first of the lesser stars above. The perpendicular at an equal distance will rest on the comet. In a straight line with the base of this triangle is the Andromeda nebula, and this is half way below the lower line of the milky way and the comet. The comet is located on a straight line between the planet Jupiter and the polar star. To better understand the diagram hold it almost above the head and face the east."



THE LOCATION ON THE COMET.

The Holmes' comet, the name which has finally been agreed upon by astronomers in the absence of any other definite name, will reach its perihelion Dec. 27, when it will be as near the sun as it can get, then will pass around and go back on its journey into space.

In regard to the assertion of Professor Colbert that the earth is liable to collide with the comet, Prof. Wiggins says: "You can judge as to the danger of that when I say that Father Sechi, the celebrated Italian astronomer, a few years ago was looking through his glass at this same comet when he saw it burst in two, thus becoming two electrical comets. These have since gradually receded from each other, and are now considered two distinct comets and have periodic times entirely dissimilar. There is no danger of their running upon each other and why should they run against the earth? Moreover, some of the asteroids, as for instance Melpomone and Nyassa, are continually crossing and recrossing the path of Mars, and never collide with that planet. Comets, however, may do us a great deal of damage, for if one should run between us and our moon, as Lexilles' comet ran among the moons of Jupiter in 1778, its powerful attraction would so contract the earth as to cause the waters of our oceans to overflow our continents, as no doubt happened at the Noachian deluge."

HOLDING ON TO THEIR JOBS.

Not Many Postmasters Resigning on Account of the Result of the Election.

It is stated at the Postoffice Department in Washington that the percentage of resignations of fourth-class postmasters received up to date on account of the result of the election has been considerably less than at the corresponding time four years ago. The largest number of resignations thus far, has come from those of the third class, whose salaries range from $1,000 to $2,000 per annum. There are about fifty of them on file. The reason assigned for their resignation is that they are compelled under the law to furnish the outfit of their offices, consisting of lock boxes, office furniture, etc., which in some cases cost several hundred dollars, often as high as $500. To protect themselves from total loss a practice, it is alleged, has prevailed for the holding over postmasters to make an agreement with the most prominent candidate for the office by which the former resigns and opens the way to a political opponent to succeed him, provided that the latter purchases the office outfit. The resignation of the postmaster is forwarded to the department, and upon the appointment of his successor by the President, the successful applicant pays for his predecessor's outfit.

Minor State Items.

A club in Connersville calls itself the "Sour Grape Club."

There will soon be an attempt made to strike natural gas near Brazil.

State Fish Commissioner Dennis has made several arrests of law violators on the Wabash River.

Natural gas leaked from the pipes and nearly suffocated Morris Wines and his family in Shelbyville.

The Farmers' Institute of Wayne and adjoining counties will hold a two days' meeting in Centerville, Dec. 15 and 16.

Luther Cox received what was supposed to be fatal injuries by a cave-in, at Muncie, while working in the water-works trench.

A company will be organized to investigate the land about Crumstown, near South Bend, as it is believed that silver is to be found there.

The Council of Tipton is agitating the question of water works, but a division exists whether the city should own the works or give away a franchise.

William Hedrick, living near Stinesville, one of the best known and wealthiest farmers of Monroe County, was found dead in the road. Paralysis is the supposed cause.

A young man named Campbell, living on a farm owned by Governor-elect Matthews near Clinton, had part of his head blown off by the accidental discharge of a shotgun. He died soon afterward.

No tidings have yet been received from Samuel Fogleman, who so unceremoniously deserted his wife and two small children near Plainfield recently. His friends are at a loss to account for his strange conduct.

Tom Cole of Jeffersonville, who was a brakeman on the South-bound P., C., C. & St. L. freight train, was killed at Slate cut. He attempted to cross from one car to another when he fell between the two. His body was taken to Vienna.

Thomas Mossman of Wabash, was probably fatally injured recently. While at work beneath a huge bank of earth, it caved upon him, burying him almost to the shoulders. He was badly crushed and hurt internally, and was black in face when released. The surgeons do not think he will survive.

The Lake Erie & Western railway will soon have a line into Yorktown, where stone-quarries, flouring-mills and factories will give it patronage. The new tack factory at Yorktown has commenced operations.

After four days hard work the big gas well on the Spiker farm, north of Muncie, has been got under control and the monster is safely chained. The pipe in the well is double that of the natural size, and the output is estimated at about 11,000,000 feet per day. Mr. George O'Neil, who harnessed the big Fairmount well, was the successful man.

There appeared before the board of pension examiners at Mount Vernon, an old man who is a link that binds us to former generations. His name is John Surber. He was a member of Company H, Tenth Indiana Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion. John Surber was born July 14, 1798, and is consequently going on ninety-five years of age. He fought under Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans. Mr. Surber has been married three times, and says he has never taken but five doses of medicine in his life. His present wife is 69 years of age. The veteran is well preserved, and promises to live to be a hundred years old. He resides in Ripley county, near Marion.

CHARLES DICKENS

FREE!

The Most Valuable and Remarkable Premium Ever Offered Free with any Periodical.

A MARVEL IN BOOK-MAKING.

A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, IN 12 LARGE VOLUMES, FREE.

There has just been published A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, in Large and Handsome Volumes, printed from entirely new plates, with new type. By special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer to our patrons this splendid set of Dickens' Works, postpaid, free. Charles Dickens was the greatest novelist who ever lived. No author before or since his time has won the fame that he achieved, and his works are even more popular to-day than during his lifetime. They abound in wit, humor, pathos, masterly delineation of character, vivid descriptions of places and incidents, thrilling and skilfully wrought plots. Each book is intensely interesting. No home should be without a set of these great and remarkable works. Not to have read them is to be far behind the age in which we live. The twelve volumes in this set contain the following world-famous works, each one of which is published complete, unchanged and absolutely unabridged:

DAVID COPPERFIELD,
MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT,
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY,
DOMBEY AND SON,

FORT WAYNE,
INDIANA.
ITS INDUSTRIAL ADVANTAGES

As a place of residence Fort Wayne is unsurpassed by any city in Indiana. Its agreeable climate, the prevalence of thrift and comfort apparent even in the dwellings of the working people, and the numerous and costly residences of the wealthy, together with unsurpassed Religious Privileges and Educational Facilities, combine to make this city one to be desired.

DIETNER & BARROWS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
The Weisell Washer—"The Best." Washes Quick, Clean, and Easy. Handy Folding Wash Bench. Agents Wanted. Send for Circulars.
New Plant will employ 100 men.

It is surely a City of Homes, as the visitor will be convinced when he looks with infinite pleasure upon the houses of the mechanic, the clerk, the young business man, and the laborer, miles and miles of streets being lined with neat but inexpensive houses, often surrounded by a plat of ground and owned by its occupant. Land has never been held at fancy prices, but the reasonable terms upon which the working classes have been able to obtain the great boon of owning their own homes has naturally enhanced the welfare of the city, and, apart from stimulating habits of thrift, has created a class of citizens who are content, and, having a stake in the country, are not so prone to become mixed up in labor troubles. The Savings Banks and Building and Loan Associations have done much good in this direction and numerous capitalists also stand ready to build and sell houses, payments to be made in small monthly sums, and no mechanic need be without a home of his own in Fort Wayne. Hundreds have been, and are now being built in that way, and the suburbs of Fort Wayne are rapidly filling up with neat and tasteful residences for the masses.

BREWERS OF
The Celebrated Kaiser, Bohemian and XX Beers.
Give employment to a large number of men the year around.

The climatic and sanitary conditions of Fort Wayne are first-class. Statistics show it to be one of the most healthful cities in the State. It is subject to no prevailing diseases, and has a perfect sewerage system.

The water works are city property, and the water taken from a nest of about eighty wells many hundred feet deep, and filtered through the sand and gravel of the naturally porous soil, thus making it absolutely pure and cool. The works are equipped with the Holly system having a capacity of four times the actual needs of the city.

FT. WAYNE LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO.
Just about once a day, on an average, the foundation of another new house is laid in Lakeside. The rapidity with which that beautiful addition is now building up with handsome homes is greater than ever before. If you have a hundred or two dollars to pay down on a lot, the Land Company will loan you all the money to build. The rent you are paying would soon secure you a home of your own.

S. F. BOWSER AND CO.,
Patentees and Manufacturers of Self-Measuring Oil Tanks.
Employ about one hundred and twenty-five men.

The Fire Department is conceded to be among the best managed and most complete in the country and never has the city suffered from any great loss by fire.

Of its educational institutions enough cannot be said. No expense is spared in perfecting and developing a complete system of public schools and besides several scholastic institutions of high rank have here found adequate support and management.

FOSTER FURNITURE AND CARPET CO.
Largest Retailers in the West in the Above Lines of Goods. They Have Immense Stores at Ft. Wayne, Lafayette and Terre Haute, Ind., and at Jackson, Mich., each with about one acre of floor surface.
They Employ Two Hundred Salesmen and Mechanics.

The right place for the business man or manufacturer is where they can get the many advantages required to run their business and successfully compete with others in the same line. These many advantages are to be found in Fort Wayne with her Natural Gas (at about one-half the cost of other fuel) the many trunk lines of railroad running through the city, every express company in existence represented by their agents, cheap rents, or if they wish to purchase, good value in real estate, and low taxes.

Besides the above concerns the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad employ 4,000; the Wabash Railroad, 1,000; the Grand Rapids and Indiana, 200; the Nickle Plate, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, and Muncie Railroads, between two and three hundred, and the Fort Wayne Electric Street Car Company, a large number of men.

If you are looking for a location do not fail to visit this beautiful city.

The Sewerage of Paris.

It is generally supposed that the sewerage of Paris is the best in the world. Hundreds of Americans have floated in a boat along the sewers of this city, and, on regaining the ground, have never dreamt that there are 100,000 cesspools in Paris which are emptied only once or twice a year.—Inter-Ocean.

THERE is something wrong that so much money is spent on funerals and tombstones, while so many who are in distress and want.

MAJOR PENDALLAS.

A Christmas Love Story.

BY FRANK R. STOCKTON

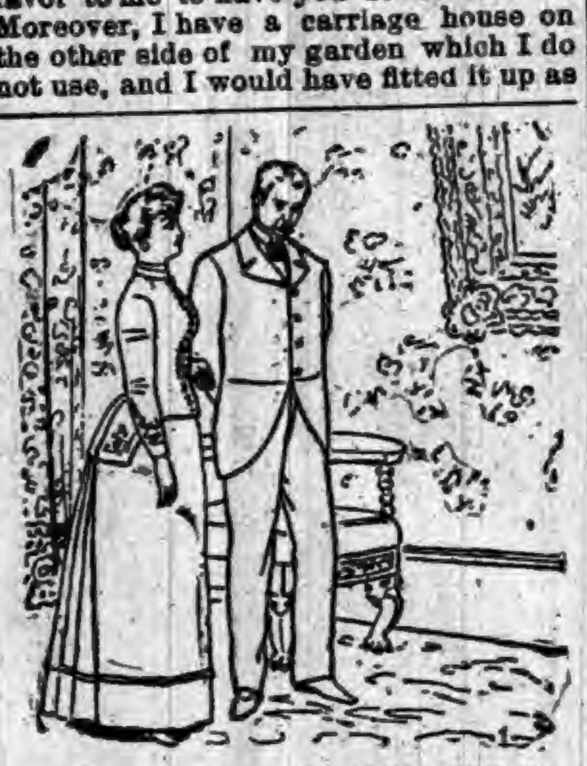
"What did you intend to offer?" I asked.

"Offer!" he said, "everything. I intended to put at your disposal, as soon after you married as you pleased, the handsomest room in the house, second floor front, with a beautiful flower garden in summer directly under the side window. I would have given you the run of this house, reading-room and everything, and made you feel at home. If the lady is a musician I would have brought a new piano; if you are fond of driving or riding my stables should have been at your service. I have to pay men to exercise the horses, and it would be a favor to me to have you do some of it. Moreover, I have a carriage house on the other side of my garden which I do not use, and I would have fitted it up as a studio for you, with a big north light and all conveniences. Then, again, if you would have liked to come here to spend your honeymoon, I would have vacated the place for a month, and let you have it all to yourselves.



HER EYES WANDERED AWAY FROM IT.

"For the accommodations I should have offered you I should have charged you no more than what your living would cost me. Certainly not over $7 a week each. For the rent of my studio, I should have asked you one landscape painting every year."

I was most cheerfully impressed by the prospect thus laid before me.

"My dear sir," I exclaimed, "you are generous, indeed. Will you make me the same offer if I bring some other lady here as my wife?"

"No, sir," cried the Major, striking his knee with his broad hand; "no, sir, I will not. I know all about Miss Weldon, and I have formed a great fancy for her. I will run no risk with outside or unknown women."

So saying he rose abruptly to his feet, walked to a window, raised the shade and looked out into the night. I remained gazing into the cheerful fire. The enthusiasm of this man had had a powerful effect upon me. I was actually thinking what a delightful thing it would be to marry Miss Weldon.

It was not the first time that this thought had come into my mind, but it had always been promptly dispelled. As I told my host, I was not a marrying man—at least I considered that my financial circumstances gave me no right to be one. But now the state of affairs seemed to be entirely changed. So far as pecuniary circumstances were concerned, there was no reason why I should not be married to-morrow, and the perception of this fact set me in a glow. The Major now returned to the fire.

"Hello!" he cried; "your face looks as if you were getting converted."

"It may be that I am," I said; "you are a powerful preacher."

He stepped quickly toward me and clapped his hands upon my shoulder.

"Now," he said, "you are on the right road. Don't hesitate, don't look to the right or the left, don't stop to consider, don't reason, but go straight ahead and ask that young woman to be your wife. The fact that you are beginning to feel converted shows that you want her, and indeed I should have a very small opinion of you if you didn't want her. Ask her to-morrow morning; ask her in this house before you go into the crowd of Dollivers, where you will have no chance at all. I'll see to it that you have every chance here."

"Major, said I, rising, "I have the greatest mind in the world to do it. You have put before me opportunities which I did not suppose to exist. You have stirred up feelings in me that I thought were long ago conquered and quieted; you have——

"Now, my dear boy," interrupted the Major, "don't say another word. Go to your room while you are in this mind, go to bed and go to sleep. Don't consider this or that or any other thing. Keep your mind on the one fact that you are going to propose to Miss Weldon in the morning. Above all, don't think about me. Don't imagine that perhaps I am not going to suit your fancies. I will give you my word that if I don't suit, or can't make myself suit, I'll clear out. I'll take the risk of all that."

"Very good," said I. "I'll go to my room, for it is past country bedtime, and I'll keep my mind on the subject you have brought up before me. But what of that regent's punch you were going to brew?"

"Not a drop, sir, not a drop," exclaimed the Major. "When men want cheering up, and have nothing to do afterward, a glass of punch on a winter night is a very good thing, but in a case like this we want clear heads. Anybody can determine to marry almost anybody if he drinks enough punch. When I set out to drive a pair of horses in a storm or on a cold, chilly night I never touch a drop of spirits, no matter how much I may feel that I need warming up. At such times I want to be sharpened, not comforted. But when I get safely home I mix myself a glass of something hot. Making up your mind at this time is much more important than driving any sort of horses in any kind of weather. The punch can wait until to-morrow, and if things turn out all right I'll brew something out of the common, I assure you."

In my bedroom that night I gave no time to deliberation. Before I bade the Major good-night I had made up my mind to propose to Miss Weldon.

CHAPTER II.

I was down-stairs before breakfast the next morning, and I met the Major just coming in from a visit to his stables.

"Merry Christmas!" he cried, "and isn't this a glorious day—sun bright and sky clear? But the snow is about a foot deep on the level, and nobody knows how deep in the drifts. I have a Canadian in my employment who walks on snow shoes, and I have sent him across the country to the Dollivers to tell them where you are and let them know you will be there in the course of the afternoon. I'll send out some men with a double team of oxen and a snow plow to break the road, and after luncheon I'll drive over myself. In the meantime how are you going to spend the morning, sir?"

I laughed as gazed into his earnest countenance.

"I am going to try to break a road into the region of matrimony," I replied.

The Major's face shone like the morning sun.

"You're sound as a dollar!" he exclaimed. After breakfast you two shall have the house to yourselves. I'll carry off Mrs. Bardsley and the rest of them to the Christmas present business in the big barn. I suppose you can get through in an hour?"

"Oh, yes," I answered; "probably in less time."

The Major was now called off, and I strolled into the reading room to look again at my picture. The room was full of the morning light, and as I turned to the wall on which my landscape hung, I stood with eyes and mouth wide open—the paper on the wall was one designed by Clara Weldon. I remembered when she was working on it in her studio. There was a tendril running through it which I had suggested. I clapped my hands, and felt like bursting out with a shout of pure enjoyment, but I restrained myself. The breakfast bell rang, and, as I went out, I closed the door behind me.

Miss Weldon came down refreshed and lovely, and as she exchanged the Christmas salutations I almost felt guilty, in thinking of the conspiracy which we two had hatched up against her, but I did not in the least swerve from my purpose.

It was about an hour afterward, when Miss Weldon and I were sitting before a blazing fire in the parlor, that I declared my love for her, and in the ardor, which increased as I spoke, I told her everything. I laid before her the whole glowing picture which Major Pendallas had painted for me.

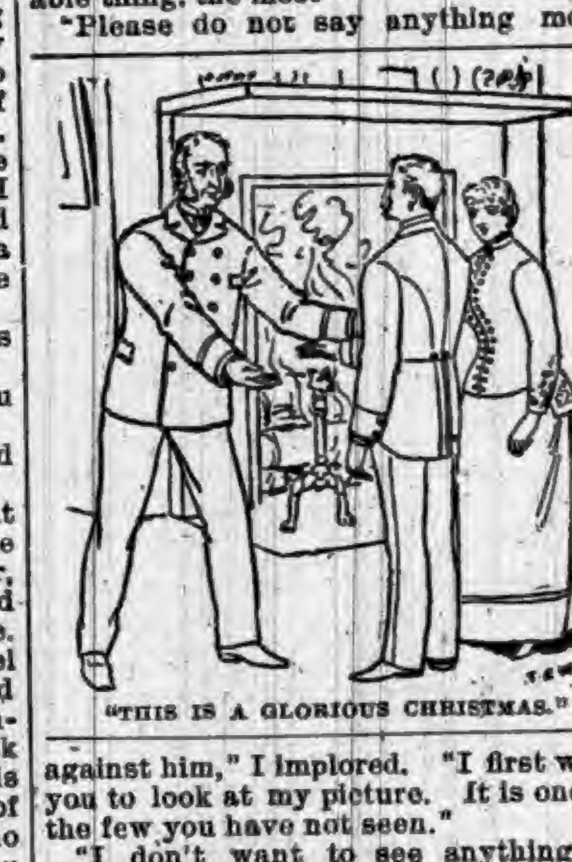
When I began to speak she looked at me in a quizzical way, as if she were amused at the sudden out-cropping of my passion, but afterward she began to listen with interest, as if it were due to me to give serious consideration to a matter which I urged so warmly, odd as it might be that I happened to be urging it just then. But when I told her what the Major had been talking about her face flushed with indignation.

"It is a shame," she exclaimed, "that that man should discuss me in such a way. What right has he to meddle with my affairs or give advice concerning me? If I can do it, I will leave this house this instant."

"You cannot do it," I said, "and I beg you will restrain your anger until I explain the case. Maj. Pendallas takes a great interest in me on account of my work. You remember what he said at breakfast about my pictures. He has taken——"

"I don't care anything about his interest in you," she interrupted. "I am thinking about myself. He has no right to take any sort of interest in me—to discuss me. It is the most unwarrantable thing, the most——"

"Please do not say anything more against him," I implored. "I first want you to look at my picture. It is one of the few you have not seen."



"THIS IS A GLORIOUS CHRISTMAS."

"I don't want to see anything he owns," she said, sharply.

"But I beg of you to come look at this because I painted it. You may never have another chance, and I very much want you to see it."

She had a kind heart, and angry as she was she accompanied me to the reading room. As we stood before the picture her eyes wandered away from it and over the wall. Then she turned and looked at me, and I looked at her, but said nothing.

"Do you suppose," she asked presently, "that he knew I designed this paper?"

"I am positive he does not," I replied, "for if he had known it he would certainly have mentioned it to me; and besides, it is almost impossible that he should know it."

"It is wonderful," she said in a softer tone. "What do you make of it?"

"I make this," I replied. "The soul of that man is in sympathy with yours and with mine. The things we do touch his tastes and his sensibilities. He covers his wall with your paper and he hangs my picture upon it. He does not know either of us, but his soul is in sympathy with us. I think you can hardly say that he has no right to take an interest in you."

She looked at me and smiled.

"That is all very pretty," she said, "but rather sentimental."

"Not a bit so," I exclaimed. "Clara, I think you cannot any longer be angry with our host, and having set him aside you will not consider me——"

"And consent to be a background to your work?" she asked. There was a bright sparkle in her eye, which made me feel justified in gently closing the door.

When Major Pendallas returned from the big barn, where according to his custom he had been making Christmas presents to all his people, he found Clara and me in the parlor. He approached us in a somewhat hesitating way, and as I looked around at him I could see an expression on his countenance which looked like a fear that he had come back before I had gotten through with the business of the morning, or perhaps before I had begun it. But as we both rose to meet him I, still holding Clara's hand, all doubt vanished from his handsome, honest, weather-browned face.

"I know it," he cried, as he looked from one to the other of us, "I know it. You needn't tell me anything," and he stretched out a hand to each of us. "This is a glorious Christmas," he said, "a glorious Christmas." It was plain he wanted to say a good deal, but could not find words, but Clara allowed no embarrassing silence.

"I have been very angry with you, Major," she said, with the kindest of smiles upon her still slightly flushed face. He looked at her inquiringly.

"It was because you were making all sorts of arrangements for me without my knowing a word about them."

"Oh, that was because he didn't understand about the wall paper," I said. "If he had known about that——"

"About what?" exclaimed Major Pendallas.

We two laughed, and then we took him into the reading room. When all was explained to him, he exclaimed: "Upon my word!" and then with his hands thrust deep into the pockets of his short coat, he turned about and deliberately gazed upon the four walls of the room.

"Truly," he cried, "I can't take it in. To think that the two years I have been sitting in this room, surrounded by these warm, bright, delicate colors, these flowers of spring; these soft leaves, and these graceful spirals; this general impression of blossomy air and then to think that you did it—I can't comprehend it. Why, I'll tell you, madame, when I went with my niece to a great city store where they had thousands of patterns of wall paper, I picked out this one in ten minutes; although there were a half-dozen others she fancied, I would have none but this for my reading-room. 'It is the flowers and the air of spring,' I said, 'and I want to have it always with me.' I thought I liked you, madame, on account of what I had heard of you, and listening to you, but that wasn't all—no, that wasn't all."

There was a moisture in Clara's eye as she held out her hand to him.

"It is most marvelous and most charming," she said, "and I can see only one objection to the state of affairs—the picture should have been Clara's and the background mine."

"Not a bit of it," exclaimed the Major, "the picture can be taken down, it can be stolen—lots of things can happen to it, and it occupies only a little space after all, but that beautiful wall is there, and it is here, and all around us, and here it will stay. It will last out my lifetime, and if any accident happens to it, I've got a lot more of it up-stairs."

A servant now entered with a letter which had been brought over from the Dollivers' by the man on snow-shoes. It was written to Clara, and she read it to us. Our friends were evidently overjoyed that we had not remained in the city, as they had supposed, and that we would soon be with them. They insisted that Major Pendallas should come over with us and spend the night. They had a large party of friends at the house and were having a jolly time.

"Oh, I'll go," said the Major; "I intended to go anyway, but, as to jolly times, the times they are having there are no more to compare with what we are having here than an ashman's donkey is fit to run a three-mile heat with my colt Sapling. But we'll help to make them jolly. I'll take over the big silver punch bowl that I won four years ago, and have not used yet, for I have never had people enough here to make it worth while. We'll christen the bowl on this happy day, and you, madam, shall have the first glass out of it. And now," continued the host, looking from the one to the other, "before we do any more or say any more, or think of anything else, I want to tell you this: Are you two going to accept my proposition, and coming to live with me? I don't say anything about winter time, because that may be asking too much, but in the time of the year you would want to live in the country anyway."

"My dear Major, said Clara, "we have been talking about your proposition, and I don't see how we can help it."

"Good," cried the Major, "good, better, best. I remarked before that this is a glorious Christmas, and I repeat the statement. Look you, the sun is beaming out of doors almost as brightly as we are beaming in here. There is a broad path out to the stables, and I want to show you a sorrel mare with the most beautiful tail and mane you ever saw. I am going to have her put into training to carry a lady, and she is to be at your service, madam, whenever you want her; and as for you, sir, there are my stables. And if a beautiful country and fine horses help to make people happy, I think you will have no fault to find."

Early in the afternoon the Major drove us over to the Dollivers' behind a pair of magnificent Cleveland bays. The grand action and spirit of the powerful animals, fired by the delight of being out of doors on this sparkling winter day, would have made Clara tremble, she said, under ordinary circumstances, but with the Major holding the reins she felt as safe as if she were dashing through the white caps with an old Cape Cod skipper at the helm.

There was a grand old Christmas time at the Dolliver house. Our hostess, who was soon informed of what had happened in the morning, urged that our engagement should be made known, and when the punch bowl was christened and the first cupful of the Major's wonderful brew was presented by him to Clara, there was an outburst of congratulations which deeply stirred the hearts of three of us.

"And now," said Major Pendallas, "let us drink the health of the blessed storm of Christmas eve, 1880."

And we drank it.

Bad Management.

Government management of railways, wherever it has been tried, has turned out to be essentially bad management. The Intercolonial Canadian Railway in Canada was designed to bring about a community of commercial interest between the maratime and central provinces by binding them together with steel rails. The idea was a good one; but with political managers in charge of the building of the road the original cost was double what it should have been, and the earnings have never been sufficient to pay expenses. As long as it remains in the hands of the Government it is likely to prove an intercolonial dead weight, of small use except as a scarecrow to warn politicians out of the field of industrial enterprise, and to furnish bread and butter to persons employed in keeping up repairs and keeping the wheels moving.—Philadelphia Record.

LONDON philanthropists, not averse to turning an honest penny, have started a plan for insuring patrons against the dire invasion of their households by twins and triplets. Of course, this exigency is one not to be overcome, but it can be made endurable. The head of a family depositing £5 and thereafter becoming the father of twins is to receive £50. If the visitation be a trio, then he will receive £75. The scheme, it may be objected, is unique, but so is the situation in the home of poverty when two or three new members dawn upon it, and the speculative philanthrophists deserve well.

SUBJECTS OF THOUGHT.

THE truly valiant dare everything but doing any other body an injury.

SOLITUDE is as needful to the imagination as society is wholesome to the character.

THE hardest trial of the heart is whether it can bear a rival's failure without triumph.

THERE is a paradox in pride; it makes some men ridiculous, but prevents others from becoming so.

WHEN moral courage feels that it is in the right there is no personal daring of which it is incapable.

HONOR hath three things in it: The vantage to do good; the approach to kings and principal persons, and the raising of a man's own fortunes.

A GENTLEMAN is one who understands and shows every mark of deference to the claims of self-love in others, and exacts it in return from them.

THERE are many women who have never intrigued, and many men who have never gamed; but those who have done either but once are very extraordinary animals.

MONUMENTS may be builded to express the affection or pride of friends, or to display their wealth, but they are only valuable for the characters which they perpetuate.

IN a man's hands, silence is the most terrible of all protests to the woman who loves him. Violence she can endure. Words she is always ready to meet with words on her side. But silence conquers her.

IF you want knowledge, you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work his life is a happy one.

THERE is no labor so productive as that which we give to an object for its own sake. The more we forget ourselves in our doings the greater the returns they will yield. The more we are willing to lose our life in our pursuits the more surely we shall find it in the fruit of our work.

IF a man finds that he is everywhere esteemed, considered honorable and trustworthy, he will be stimulated to become still more so. If he finds every one suspecting him, he will much more easily succumb to temptation. And so with all other merits and demerits, showing how powerful a factor in human life is the emphasis we use.

WE touch one another in all life's associations; we impress more or less all with whom we come in contact. In the home, in society, in business, we leave our mark. It becomes us all then to inquire what kind of an impression we are making upon childhood and manhood in our several spheres of influence. Is it for good or for ill? If for good, then our life is worth living; if for evil, then it is a failure.

NEVER be influenced by external appearances in forming your judgment of a person. This is an important rule, for many a noble spirit is covered by habiliments of poverty, while not infrequently a showy exterior conceals a villain of the basest kind. Dean Swift said that nature had given every man a capacity of being agreeable, though not shining in company; and "there are a hundred men sufficiently qualified for both who by a very few faults that they can correct in half an hour are not so much as tolerable.

WE must never forget that, whatever be the circumference which claims our allegiance, we are still the center, and must remain self-poised and resolute. He who despises himself, who neglects himself, who timidly conforms himself in all things to other people and has no respect for his own individuality, can never be a force in the world. This indeed is only another form of selfishness—loving ease and hating toil, living without energy or purpose, and sinking like a dead weight on whoever will bear it. It is perhaps difficult at once to preserve our centrality and to identify ourselves with each circumference; but what is there of the highest and the best that does not present difficulty? Emerson says, "It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."

The Dude and the Mad Dog.

"You cannot always judge a book by the cover," said Major Tom Speedwell at the Laclede. "If any man despises a dude I do. I am prejudiced against any man who uses perfumery, wears a silk hat, a stand-up collar, or carries a cane. When I find a man doing all those ridiculous things at one and the same time it is all I can do to refrain from personal violence. I yearn to hit him, just on general principles. Add to these offenses against the canons of horse sense a button-hole bouquet, a curled mustache and a lisp, and my fingers fairly tingle for a grip of his neck, my toes for a coup de grâce.

"Yet I saw just that kind of a biped perform an act of heroism that made me think better of mankind.

"I was walking down Madison street, Chicago, last summer, when there was suddenly raised that most appalling of all cries of terror, 'Mad dog!' An old lady and a little girl were crossing the street, down the center of which a big mastiff was plunging, with bloodshot eyes and foaming mouth, pursued by a couple of officers. He made straight for the old lady, caught her dress and dragged her down. He then sprang at her throat, but before he reached it a youngster tricked out in the toggery I abhor had him by the neck.

"The beast raged like a demon, but the dude held him fast until an officer came up and put a bullet through his head. He then picked up his silk tile, brushed it with his elbow, and said, with an idiotic lisp: 'Every dog in the thty thould be killed; every body that keepth a dog in the thity thould be hanged.' His philosophy was sound as his nerve. I went home and wrote with a piece of chalk across the headboard of my bed: 'A man may dress like a cad and look like a fool, and still have sand and sense to give away.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

LIVURA M'F'G. Co.,

DEAR SIRS:—"Last winter I had La Grippe in its worst form, leaving me in a terrible condition, my Brain was confused, my Heart weak, and my legs refused to hold me up, and the muscles were so sore that it was painful to lie down. I had continual Headache, and everything I ate distressed me. I could not work, sleep, or eat, and my right side became numb. Several doctors told me I had Incipient Paralysis, and that I could get no better. I grew so weak that I could not leave the house. Hearing of PITCHER'S LIVURA I got a bottle and it helped me from the first. I took 4 bottles in all, and am PERFECTLY WELL in every way, and now work all day. I know that

IMPROVED
ROASTER & BAKER

FOR MEATS, FOWL, FISH, ETC., AND FOR BAKING BREAD, CAKES AND PUDDINGS.

BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THURSDAY..... DECEMBER 1, 1892.

DR SCOTT, Mrs. Harrison's father, died Tuesday.

GRAHAM N. FITCH died at his home in Logansport Tuesday, at the age of 83. He had been a member of congress, and U. S. senator, and once challenged Stephen A. Douglas to fight a duel.

THE U. S. treasurer reports a decrease of nearly 38 millions in the revenue, during the year, compared with the year before. This is largely due to the republican blunder, of fixing up the tariff so as to "protect" rather than to produce a revenue. It was a mistake also in reducing the internal revenue on tobacco and on liquors. No one asked for this reduction, and it should be put on again

Teachers' Association.

The meeting of the DeKalb County Teachers' Association, held here last week, was not only well attended by the teachers but the workers were out in full force, We believe everyone who had an exercise was on hand, although there was not time to give all a chance. It is customary to have more names on the program, than could be given time as a few always fail to attend. But in this case all were there. This is a most encouraging feature. There were excellent addresses and good papers read, as well as some fine recitations. Among those who took some work were P. D. L Alspach, John Krontz, Ida Husselman, C. P. Hamman, John Urey, R. A. Boblitt, Edgar Bates, Belle Till, S. M. High, Laura Sewvel, E. H. Fisher, J. J. Eakright, L. H. Higley, Florence Hollopeter, A. L. Shultz and I. V. Smurr. Those who were omitted at this meeting are to have their work at the meeting next year. There were, besides these home teachers, Mrs. W. B. Campbell, formerly Miss Sarah Tarney, and L. O. Dale, superintendent of Wabash county, both of whom gave work of a high order. Mr. Dale makes a special study of the teachers' reading circle work, and his remarks were valuable to the meeting. He is almost entitled to be classed as a DeKalb teacher, at least his wife, formerly Miss Bryant, a sister of Mrs. B. F. Cornelius, used to be one of our teachers. Mr. Merica, our own popular superintendant also took an active part. We would not willingly close without a good word for the president of the association, Prof. C. E. Kriebel, superintendent of the Butler schools. As all who knew him would expect, he threw into the work of the meeting, that push and energy that have always characterized his work, and that have had so much to do with the improvement he has brought about in the Butler schools. He was every inch a president in all the term implies—a master of the situation and one of the busiest and brainiest workers. It was one of the best meetings we ever had.

Commissioners' Meeting.

They met Friday, last, and as there was no good fishing for Mr. Lockwood, all were present. The first great struggle was on the appointment of a superintendent of the Poor Farm, to take the place of Mr. Glazier, who has resigned There were many bids and they ranged all the way from $400 to $700, and as far as we have learned the bidders were all unusually well fitted for the place. It was a difficult matter to decide between them, and other work was taken up on Saturday, and then they adjourned till Monday. On that day several ballots were taken, and on Tuesday, also, the last being on Tuesday evening, when it was found that Augustus Bartels, of Jackson township, had two votes, and W. N. Myers, one. His bid was $500. Those who know him best, say the choice is an excellent one. The votes all along, showed that the board thought well of all the men, for each got votes at different times. Wednesday was devoted to bridges The regular session begins Monday.

The Coming Session of Congress.

Judge McClellan starts for Washington Saturday so as to be present at the opening of congress on Monday. This is the second session of this congress, and the work that was partly done in the session of last winter and spring, may be finished in part at least, provided the republican senate is willing. There are some very important bills that passed the House, and were pigeon holed in the senate, and there allowed to remain. Among these is the bill putting wool on the free list, a measure that would not only give us cheaper clothing but will increase the business of woolen manufacturing. Judge McClellan hopes, that at least this bill may be taken up by the senate and passed. He will for his own past, push forward his Income Tax Bill, the one he has already given so much study. We believe that under existing circumstances, this will become one of the leading measures, and that it must now receive the earnest consideration of congress. The present low condition of funds in the treasury calls for some measure ty fill up the empty coffers resulting from republican mismanagment. And the people look to an income tax, or to a raise in the internal revenue taxes on tobacco and liquors, rather than to any increase in tariff rates or import duties. This condition of things proves Judge McClellan's foresight, when he brought the bill up, and now in this serious financial emergency, the people are turning to it as a means of relief from impending financial trouble. This proposed law, has in view the taxing of all incomes above $5,000, and it certainly looks as if a man who makes more than that, over and above his expenses, can reasonably afford to give a small sum to the government. At different times, readers of the COURIER have asked us to give again, more fully, the main features of this proposed law. This we will now endeavor to do, as well as portions of the Judge's speech on the subject, as soon as we can secure copies, which we hope to do by next week. We know of no subject of more vital importance. Congress will only fairly begin its work and then at the end of two weeks, there will be the usual holiday adjournment, and after that the real business of the session will begin, only to close on the fourth of March.

Silver Anniversary

A. J. Baxter and wife, at Butler, celebrated their silver wedding last Saturday evening, by inviting a number of friends and relatives, and as they are deservedly popular, the number of guests was considerable, nearly 150. A splendid supper was served, which for abundance and quality would be difficult to excel This latter and very pleasant part of the program, was served up in the adjoining residence, that of his son-in-law, Mr. Park, while the reception proper was in Mr. Baxter's own comfortable home. Several were present from Waterloo, including Ab. Kelly and wife, Paul. Plum and wife and John Duncan and wife. And from Auburn, were Mrs. B's, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs J. Latson, G. W. Askew and wife and J. A. Barns and wife. All had a good time. But we missed a part of the real business. At noon that day, Rilla, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Baxter, was married to Carey Duncan, of Waterloo This was a real wedding of course, and a real surprise as well. But all added to the interest of the occasion. The COURIER adds its best wishes that both the elder and the younger couples, who were principals on that occasion, may have a pleasant future.

NOTICE.

Mrs. S Tryphena Sawyer, having for a considerable time past used all means and purposes, to treat me with abuse and contempt, and also to incense my own children against me, and to with her, disobey, disregard and disrespect me. And having on the 28th day of November, after using deceit and falsehood to accomplish her purpose, with the help of numerous instigators and abettors, (persons known, but not herein named) did on the above date, maliciously, felonously and willfully in my absence from home, enter and rob my home of household goods in greater part, and secreted them away to some place unknown to me. And she having also made application to the Court of Common Pleas for a divorce from me. I do therefore notify all persons not to sell her any goods or make accounts and charge the same to me.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. George Swineford and wife, will make an extended visit with friends in the west, we believe.

I. N. Cool and family go the last part of this week to their new home at Logansport. This has been Mr. Cool's home from childhood and here he and his wife have spent all their early married life, and it is needless to say, they will leave many warm friends. Mr. Cool has been at different times engaged in various lines of business and has a reputation for ability and integrity, that should be valuable to him in his new location. He is an experienced business man and especially so in his present line of work, the manufacture of road wagons, he having been engaged in that line for many years, in some way. Lately, he has received patents for valuable improvements in these vehicles, from which we hope he may reap a liberal advantage. We commend him heartily to the business men of Logansport, and his good wife to the ladies among whom she is to make her home. They are worthy citizens, and we regret to see them depart. It might not be amiss, at this point to note further, that Mr. Cool is a democrat of the faithful kind. This has been proved time and again, and especially this year, when as vice chairman of the county committee, he so ably and faithfully assisted Chairman Becks Erick, to carry the party safely through one of the hardest fought and most uncertain campaigns for the county democracy we ever passed through. The democrats of Cass county, need not be afraid to give him the right hand of fellowship. He has the right grip.

Accidental Shooting.

Last Thursday, Henry Ludwig went out hunting near Alva Brandon's and was succeeding very well, having among other things, shot a fine pheasant. Meeting some friends, he told them about the pheasant and they asked to see it. He went to take it from his game bag, and in doing this, his gun slipped down, and in falling it struck a log, and was discharged, the shot going upward and striking him at the shoulder, tearing a bad hole in the flesh there. The wound was quite a bad one, but fortunately the direction was favorable, or it might have torn his arm off at the shoulder. Dr. Casebeer dressed the wound, and he is getting along all right the last we heard.

Resolutions.

WHEREAS: Mrs. Plum has been a faithful, earnest and efficient teacher in our Sabbath school for the past four years, and today closed her labors in our school on account of leaving Auburn for another home, therefore

RESOLVED. That the officers, teachers and pupils of the Presbyterian S. S. of Auburn, Indiana, express our high regard for her, and our sincere regret that she is so soon to leave us. Also to extend to her our heartfelt thanks for her efficient services in our school, and pray that God may bless her efforts wherever she may go.

RESOLVED. Second, that this resolution be spread on the records of the Sabbath school and published in one home paper.

The Yellow and White.

The young ladies who gave the "yellow and white social," at Mrs. Dill's, last Thursday evening made it a great success. The attendance was quite large, and the various devices for entertaining them, were ingenious and successful. The "seven oracles" created a good deal of amusement, and were kept busy till they were tired out. The "mule trick," was also a source of fun. In this, Mrs. Barns received the prize for the nearest success, and Pearl Kelley for the farthest away. There was a nice lunch, also, presided over by Mrs. Dills and Mrs. Kelley, and altogether it was a very pleasant affair. We should not forget to say, the rooms were decorated in yellow and white, and that it was Miss Mary Teeters' Sunday school class that gave the entertainment.

A Neat Surprise.

There was a big surprise at the residence of Samuel Campbell on Monday evening, and a very pleasant one, too. Twenty-one couples, including all the members of the Garrett Junior Band, came over from that place, quietly, reaching the Campbell residence about nine o'clock. It was for a surprise birthday party, in honor of Frank Campell, that being his twenty-first birthday. So there was a couple of young people for each year of his life, a very appropriate number. Frank is a member of the band, and very popular with them, a fact clearly shown by the number who came over that evening. He is a steady and industrious young man, and it pleases the COURIER to see these good qualities appreciated.

SOME people think that justice applies exclusively, or almost exclusively, to money transactions and dealings in business. But that is a very restricted and imperfect view of what constitutes justice. It lies quite as much in the habit and manner of speech as in the making and fulfillment of contracts.

ONE of Mexico's bravest generals, failing to capture Garza, has been sentenced to death. Such retribution adds a new feature to military ethics. If generals are to be slain when defeated in battle there will be no battles, and the annual peace congress need only meet hereafter for the purpose of congratulating itself.

NOW THAT the hardships of the winter season will soon be upon the poor, charitably disposed persons will do far more to relieve misery by giving their alms to church or secular organized charities than by indiscriminate support of professional beggars, who victimize the public and the really deserving poor at the same time.

WHEN a pair of fighting animals, presumably human, are offered $40,000 to batter each other in a ring, and hesitate about accepting it, the inference that they are mutally fearful of being licked is not only fair but obvious. The inference as to the state of the public mind that makes such an offer possible is left for future psychologists to worry about.

A MAN named Calvignac over in France was a faithful employe of a mining company. Fortune elected him Mayor and he neglected his vulgar duties for those of office. Then his employers bounced him and all his associate miners struck. So began an industrial war that has paralyzed Carmaux. But firm and unflinching Mr. Calvignac holds onto his office. He is much like other people.

THE loyal people of Granada, who had expected a visit from the Queen and were disappointed, attested their grief by by resolving themselves into quite a successful mob. They sorrowfully kicked the lights out of some buildings; with aspect dolorous tore others down and trampled sadly upon triumphal arches. Having thus demonstrated that their woe was genuine, they went howling to jail, a structure that in their haste they had neglected to overturn.

THE Pittsburg agent of the Humane Society advocates the establishment of the whipping post as a means of punishing wife-beaters. He thinks about 50 per cent. of the grievances laid before the Department of Public Safety and the Humane Society are complaints against wife-beaters. READERS of public library books are familiar with the work of the superior person who marks passages for the purpose of attracting the special attention of others whom he assumes to be less capable than himself of appreciating a good thing at first sight. People of dull perceptions are greatly indebted to this gifted individual for pointing out what is particularly excellent in the library books.

AT Santa Rosa, Cal., a man hurled a stone through the plate-glass window of a bank, explaining that he did so because he was hungry. He was asked why he had chosen to quell his clamorous appetite with so large and expensive a pane and lacked the presence of mind to reply that it was because he was very hungry, indeed. No man with a stomach flapping idly against his spine could reasonably be expected to find satiety in a 10x12 window light worth two bits.

THE determination of the United States authorities to prevent European immigration from recently infected districts during the winter is wise and just. Thousands of immigrants scattered throughout the country during the winter would be certain to spread the scourge in every quarter when the hot months are reached. The interests of the people at all times should be thoroughly guarded, and next year, when we expect the whole world as our guests, it is imperative that no blunders should be made. Uncle Sam can get along without his usual million of immigrants the coming year.

THERE are peculiar people in Milwaukee who, but for the great fire, would never have known fame. When charitable citizens sent funds liberally for the benefit of the poor who had been burned out, these people appeared and gratefully accepted their dole. It was found that some of them were worth $20,000, owned houses outside the burned district, and had long bank accounts. When they appeared the second time they were surprised by being kicked down stairs, and went their way convinced that, while charity suffereth long and is kind, it does occasionally draw the line.

ONE not infrequently sees a news item to the effect that the brain of some criminal has been turned over to the learned anatomists for study and discover wherein it differed from the ordinary human brain, and often with the idea of throwing some new light on the character of a criminal or the reason of his depravity. At a late meeting of the Neurological Association this subject was up for discussion, with the result that nothing is yet ascertained that can be practically useful. It is not possible to pick out the criminal's brain from a dozen others by any special marks, fissures or evidence of criminality. It may be worth while handling criminal brains over to the doctors for study, for only by so doing can there be any discoveries in this line, but up to the present time there has been very little discovered worth mentioning.

IF the account of a recent occurrence at Northwestern University is strictly true, then great improvement can be made in the methods of discipline employed in the "co-ed" department of that institution. It is reported that 100 young ladies were summoned to appear in the chapel at midnight, attired as they happened to be at the moment, and were compelled to remain there while two Chicago detectives searched their rooms for a sum of money alleged to have been stolen from one of their number. The matron is indignant that the affair should have gained publicity and says that the young lady who told of it committed a dishonorable act. In this the matron is mistaken The proceeding, if it occurred as related, was most extraordinary and in poor taste and could not possibly have been kept secret. A grave suspicion was cast upon the young ladies whose rooms were searched, and the indignation which they feel is perfectly justifiable and natural.

Tansy.

"Tansy"—a humble plant. Its name has seen far better days. In Greek it was athanasia. How little of the original is left—only a shred. In old New England days, and even now, the kitchen garden had its tansy bed to draw from in the interest of "tansy cheese," "rum and tansy," "tansy bitters," and, in case of illness, "tansy tea." It is only a trace of classic custom that has come down through the ages. So powerful its properties that should Jove's messenger administer a draught of tansy cordial to a mortal he took on immortality. The Yankee took it for another reason. So popular was Tansy that it was adopted as a christening name, and in several European countries to-day Athanase (immortality) is very popular. As an example of word debasement tansy is rather striking.—Davenport Democrat.

THE REPUBLICAN ROUT.

MANY ARE THE CAUSES GIVEN BY G. O. P. ORGANS.

Plans Put Forward by Republicans by Which They Propose to Get Together—"Calamity Howlers," Old and New—Protectionism Must Go.

Retrospective and Prospective.

Many causes are given by the Republicans for the defeat which has overtaken, yes, and overwhelmed them. Bad management; lack of organization, too close connections with Carnegie and Frick; desire for a change; ignorance—especially on the part of immigrants; Australian ballot system. But by far the greater number of Republicans attribute defeat to McKinleyism—which was too strong for the people. But are these Republicans going to modify their protection views to save their party? Not much. Matt Quay, who is good Republican authority, says: "I believe that the Republican party should not yield one inch in its theories as to the benefits of a protective tariff." In this he is sanctioned by the American Economist, the New York Tribune, and all other Republican newspapers.

How now do the Republicans propose to pick themselves up and get together for another battle? Two plans have been put forward. One by Senator Allison, who says that during the next four years "It will be the mission of the Republican party to watch and wait, and, perhaps, to pray." Watch and wait and pray for Democratic mistakes that may exceed past Republican blunders, so that the people may again be induced to accept Republicanism as the lesser of two evils. This policy, which probably is in great favor by Republican politicians, is not calculated to attract voters, who believe in a positive, progressive policy. The other is more aggressive, though less definite. It is that of the New York Press, also sanctioned by many sound Republicans. The Press thinks the battle was lost because the young men did not vote the Republican ticket. It says "a host of first voters, whose rightful place is in the Republican party," cast their votes for Democrats. The remedy is to bring young men into the Republican ranks, by teaching them the history of the g. o. p. "Few young men," says the Press, "appreciate the tremendous significance of the Republican record for the past thirty-two years." They should understand that the "faith of Lincoln, and Seward, and Grant is still the Republican creed"; and that the "economic dogmas of John C. Calhoun and Jefferson Davis are still the fundamental beliefs of the Democratic party." The Press proposes to begin this "work of education and organization" at once and to carry it on with "system and thoroughness" until 1896.

This is a good theory, but it has some weak points. It is customary to catch a hare before eating it. This cannot always be done by sprinkling salt on its tail. It is because the young men have studied the record of the Republican party that they have deserted it. What inducement, then, will start the procession of "first voters" towards these Republican leagues? We fear that that neither of these plans will prove successful. But it is a satisfaction to know that the g. o. p. will go down with McKinley colors flying.

Our Senate True to Its Trusts.

The farmers of the West, with the factory hands of the East, have declared that the Democratic platform contained the right kind of a tariff plank. "Republican protection is a fraud" and a farce, and the people want no more of it. They made this decision in 1890 and emphasized it in 1892. For two years the millionaire Senate, at once the agent, servant, and tool of the monopolists, have blocked progress and defied the express will of the people. Unfortunately they can prevent the lowering of duties for another year. Will they dare do it? It is fair to presume that they will do so. It is only in this way that they can show their appreciation of the millions of dollars contributed by the trusts to the Republican campaign and corruption fund. They are under obligations to these American infant trusts—all born under Republican rule during the last twenty years. This respite of one year will return to the coffers of the trust tenfold more than was taken out of them for use by Quay, Carter, Hacket & Co. The Carnegies and Fricks in the steel rail industry are getting at least $5 a ton more for their rails than they would get without a duty. This means $10,000,000 a year extra profit to them. They have invested only about $1,000,000 in the protection fund. The sugar trust is making a clear $15,000,000 a year because of the duty of one-half cent per pound on refined sugar; yet it is generally believed that its contribution to the fund for developing patriotic votes did not exceed $250,000, an insignificant consideration when the benefits are considered. The saw trust is selling saws all over the world. It would not need a duty if it sold at the same price everywhere. But it does not. Its export price is from 8 to 20 per cent. under its price to genuine stay-at-home Americans. The duty prevents re-importations and is probably worth $500,000 a year to the trust; yet the Distons are publicly credited with but $10,000 of the $2,000,000 Pennsylvania fund. The window, flint and plate glass trusts are enabled by their 100 per cent. protection to draw annually on the American people for $12,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year, yet they are down for but a few thousand on Carter's books. It is evident from these figures that our trusts are in the hands of conservative and safe business men—men who seldom make bad investments; and unless their interests are betrayed by their employes in the present Senate their few millions will have been well spent, even though invested in a losing cause. They have no fear of betrayal and expect the Senate to continue to pigeon-hole all the tariff reform bills presented to it.

Watterson on the Result.

We simply mean to reverse the movement of engines that were driving us to ruin. We mean to do what the Republicans promised to do in the enactment of the war tariff—reduce it to a peace footing. We mean to proceed with this work like statesmen, not like mountebanks and revolutionists. The Democratic party represents at this moment not merely the numbers but the brain and the conscience of the people; and, mindful of its responsibilities, it will address itself to the revision and reduction of the tariff duties upon lines so enlightened and conservative as will conduct us from the high-protection scale to the low-revenue scale by a process so gradual and just as to make the transition a pleasure to everybody except the unpatriotic and rapacious, who have grown rich off special privileges obtained.

"Calamity Howlers" Old and New.

How things have changed since Nov. 8. Previous to that memorable day Republicans styled Democrats "calamity howlers," because they declared that taxes came out of the earnings of our citizens, and charged some of the wage reductions and strikes to increased taxes. The Democrats will soon lighten our tax burdens by removing some of that portion which is collected for the benefit of trusts and protected manufacturers. Hence every wage reduction for the next four years and every closed mill will be credited by a new set of "calamity howlers" to the Democratic policy of free trade.

The Republicans have already given us samples of what we may expect. We hear of Republican manufacturers who have kept their promise to reduce wages if Cleveland was elected. These promises were made in 1888, and, what was particularly exasperating to workingmen, wages were often reduced though Harrison was elected. The truth is that many Republican manufacturers, who were intending to reduce wages, will make the Democratic victory an excuse for doing so. The increased prosperity in all lines, which will follow from free raw materials and reduced cost of living, will soon create a demand for labor that will make it impossible for manufacturers to get efficient labor at low wages. There is no help for this condition of affairs. A few wage reductions will occur, and many more will be threatened by manufacturers and heralded all over our land by Republican papers. The more numerous wage advances, new mills built and industries established, will not receive the attention which has heretofore been bestowed upon them by Republican newspapers.

The Lesson of McKinleyism.

The McKinley tariff law by the striking object lessons which it furnished brought the question of protection directly home to the people of the Northwest. It taught them that protection was an evil; it taught them, moreover, through such channels as the free sugar schedules, that the advocates of protection had been lying to them all along. Their wrath at the discovery that they had been robbed was only intensified by the knowledge that the men who had plundered them had also deceived them.

They rebuked the authors of the McKinley tariff in the Congressional elections of 1890. The desire to emphasize that rebuke kept Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, and Michigan in the Democratic column in 1892. The people of those States expect to reap the rewards of the victory they have helped to win. They expect the tariff to be revised, not by its friends and in the interest of its beneficiaries, but by the representatives and in the interests of the whole people. And they certainly expect that the false and vicious idea of protection shall be eliminated root and branch from the tariff schedules.—Chicago Herald.

Protectionism Must Vacate.

The people have served a dispossession notice, and protectionism must vacate as soon as its present lease expires. It has had possession of the premises for thirty years. It has always been a bad tenant, but it is only during the last few years, since it has been wedded to McKinleyism and began to assume full control and ownership, that the owners have come to the conclusion that it was a most undesirable tenant, with its hundreds of lawless children—the tariff trusts which are breaking our public furniture and juggling with our political machinery. It has been a most expensive tenant, and it has cost the United States a hundred times what it has paid for its privileges here. It is a greedy, selfish, unpatriotic and un-American thing. It has degraded and defiled everybody and everything that it has touched. Let us banish it forever, and may it never succeed in reaching other shores to curse other peoples!

Stop the Robbery at Once.

The people are heavily taxed. In 1890 they demanded relief. A Republican Senate and President have refused it. They now emphasize their demand. If the Republicans do not give considerable relief this winter an extra session of Congress should be called in March. The cost of an extra session is given as a reason against it, but this is unimportant. The duty of ½ cent per pound on refined sugar, which puts nothing into the treasury, but about $5,000,000 a year into the pockets of the Sugar Trust, is a robbery. If an extra session should do nothing except to put sugar on the free list it would pay for itself twice over. But there are hundreds of trusts with their hands in the people's pockets, some even deeper than the Sugar Trust. Stop this robbery! Stop it at once and save hundreds of millions of dollars to the people, besides gaining their confidence.

SOME of the new ships of the navy are to have three smokestacks, each 100 feet high. This circumstance will supply excellent draught for the fires and excellent targets for the enemy, thus killing two birds with one stone, and making at the same time, an equal division of the birds.

AN Eastern statistician has figured out that $193,000,000 will be expended for dwelling houses in this country in the year 1893, and a large proportion of them will be built by workingmen for their own occupancy.

THERE is more joy than sorrow in the world, for man smiles a thousand times where he weeps once.

THEY ARE PLEASED.

Prohibitionists Satisfied with Their Showing at the Polls.

"Leaders of the Prohibition party are very much encouraged over the results of the election just passed," said C. L. Stevens, editor of the Lever, the official organ of that party. He continued:

"We think the National vote will run to about 325,000, against 250,000 for 1888. In the Western States, such as Kansas, Nebraska and Minnesota, where the People's party movement was very strong, we lost some from our vote of four years ago. On the other hand, in most of the States east of the Mississippi River, and in Iowa and California, we made substantial gains. Nearly every State shows some increase over 1888. I believe that the official returns will show the increase in Illinois to be the greatest of any State. Indiana made good gains, and also New York, including New York City, and most of the New England States."

The Vote.

FOUR MEN KILLED IN A WRECK.

A Grand Island, Neb., dispatch says: At Alda Siding, eight miles west of Grand Island, express train No. 8, going at a speed of forty-five miles an hour, crashed into an extra freight train standing on the switch.

The passenger train, which was due here at 5 o'clock and at Omaha at 10:40, was nearly one hour and a half late, and, striking the grade west of Alda, Engineer McDonald determined to make up some of the time, and pulled the throttle open. The freight engine had been doing considerable switching on the siding. After the work had been completed the engine was comparatively dead at the head of the siding. The morning was foggy, and unmindful of danger and secure in the thought that the switch was properly placed, the engineer and fireman of the extra waited for the passenger train to rush by.

But the switch had not been closed and the passenger train brought death to four men and fatally wounded three others through criminal negligence of the switch tender. The men killed were: J. W. Keller, conductor of the freight, Grand Island. He leaves a widow and two children. Barney McDonald, engineer of the passenger, North Platte. Leaves a widow, but no children. Gus Barrett, engineer of the freight, North Platte. Leaves a widow and three children. Ira Owens, fireman of the freight, North Platte. Leaves a wife and five children. The injured are: William Costella, fireman of the passenger, Grand Island; single; badly scalded; both ankles fractured and will probably die. William Sutherland, brakeman on the freight, Grand Island; single; caught in wreck and feet broken. A. M. Lyons, mail agent, Kearney; head wounded and leg fractured.

No passengers were injured. Both engines are wrecked, while the mail and baggage cars are badly damaged. Inside of half an hour a relief train from Grand Island was on the scene with physicians to look after the wounded and all passenger and baggage were transferred from the wreck to the relief train, which reached Omaha at 3 o'clock.

MRS. LEASE IS WILLING.

If the People of Kansas Desire It She Will Become a Senator.

Topeka, Kan., special: Mrs. M. B. Lease has just made the first authoritative statement concerning the use of her name in connection with the United States Senatorship. She arrived in town last night, and this morning she held a reception at her hotel. She announces to all callers that she would accept the Senatorship if it was offered her, but she would not engage in the scramble for the place. "I shall not enter the race for the place," she said. "The office should seek the woman as well as the man. When I say I shall make no fight I say it with this proviso: That I am not attacked solely because I am a woman. There is one very peculiar fact connected with my candidacy. I have received hundreds of letters of encouragement from men since the announcement of my candidacy, but not one from a woman. I am the only woman who has ever been mentioned in connection with a place of this kind, and I naturally expected some encouragement from my sex. A letter from Miss Anthony, for example, or a word of encouragement from Mrs. Joyns. Single-handed and alone I have done more for woman suffrage than all of them. I had a suffrage plank incorporated in the Populists' platform, and I forced the Republican party to do the same thing. If the politicians see fit to attack me because of my sex I shall fight this thing to a finish as a matter of principle."

CONCERNING THE CROPS.

The General Condition in This Section Is Good.

The Farmer's Review of this week, speaking of the crop outlook, says: The rains have somewhat improved some of the conditions and have had a tendency to revive the pastures and to hasten the growth of the winter cereals. But, on the other hand, the moisture came so late that much of the wheat and rye will make very little growth and will not thicken up before the ground freezes. This will leave the crops in an exposed condition to a great extent and less able to withstand adverse climatic changes the coming winter. The future of the crops is largely problematic.

Although the growth of winter wheat is not what could be desired, still there has, as yet, been no disaster to the crop. A great deal of it has not yet come up or is just appearing, but if the future conditions are favorable it may yet prove the foundation for a good crop. As the crop is to-day the general condition may be called good in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska and Wisconsin. It appears to promise three-fourths of a crop in Kentucky, Kansas and Iowa. Little winter wheat is raised in Minnesota, the crop there being largely experimental, and cutting no figure on the general market.

Are Dentist Doctors?

A good many American dentists have gone to Germany and have acquired large practice there. Most of these relying upon their diplomas, style themselves "doctors." Complaint has been made against them and in a recent decision the courts have fined the dentists heavily, ruling that the title "doctor" does not apply to them. This has caused a good deal of consternation among the dentists and they ask themselves if they are not doctors. What are they? It is curious to note that this cry of irregularity is always made against a new thing and yet it may be said that the proprietary medicines have revolutionized the system of medicine. Now when the children are taken with cold, the mother does not wait to have it settle into a severe case, nor when they are taken with croup in the night is she obliged to wait and send for a doctor, getting him there many times when it is too late. Instead of doing this, she gets her bottle of Reid's German Cough and Kidney Cure and gives the little one a dose with the result in the morning that the children are well without any further trouble. This great remedy costs 25 cents for the small bottles and 50 cents for the large. Get it of any dealer.

A Child's Favorite.

In a class of small children the teacher desired, by illustration, to define the word favorite. She said, after several fruitless attempts:

"Well, children, if there was some one you loved more than anybody else in the world, and wished always to keep her with you, what would you say she was—what name would you give her?"

A small boy held up his hand, and when told to answer promptly responded:

"My mother!"—Detroit Free Press.

"Me First! Me First!"

Little Margaret has been to Ohio on a visit with her mother, and has played much with a wee cousin who has been spoiled a bit and has a bad habit of crying, "Me first! Me first!" on every occasion.

Margaret picked up the cry, too, but her mother talked to her in private and told her the words were not pretty. One day Margaret climbed into a high and rickety chair. "Oh, get down," said her mother, "else you'll go heels over head."

"And if I did," said little Margaret, "then my heels would be saying to my head, 'Me first, me first,' wouldn't they?"—New York Recorder.

How a Little Alligator "Got Even" with a Little Snake.

I once saw a very funny combat between a baby alligator and a tiny snake. Quite a number of both were in a glass tank provided with a small pond, rocks, and growing plants. You would have thought it a perfect nursery for the babies to grow and be happy in.

But while this thought was passing through my mind I saw an alligator make a sudden snap as a little snake was slipping over him, and in a moment the poor little thing found his head held tight between the needle-like teeth of the alligator. Wriggle and twist as he might, he could not get away.

In vain he tried to choke his enemy by closely encircling his neck; the alligator held his head perfectly rigid, and finally shut his eyes with an air of self-satisfaction, as if it were a most ordinary thing for him to have a snake tying double bow-knots around his neck.

After a long time, either because he forgot his prize and yielded to a desire to yawn, or because he thought the presumption of the snake in crawling over him had been sufficiently punished, the baby alligator opened his jaws, and away went the snake, seemingly none the worse for his adventure.—St. Nicholas.

"Goosie."

"Whew!" That was what the farmer said to his wife when Mr. Belden drove up from the station one Saturday night to spend Sunday with his wife and little boy.

"Guess we'll hev ter look out fer the chickens with that thar animal about."

"Never mind. You jest keep still," said the farmer's wife. "The Beldens are nice people, an' summer's 'most gone."

It was a curious pet, but the odder a thing was the better little Frank Belden liked it—any boy knows that. Mr. Belden knew it, too, having once been a boy, and that was how he came to buy a mongoose, a curious little African animal, which much resembles a rat.

Frank became so fond of it! It was playful as a kitten, full of sportive tricks. Quite useful, too, because it snapped up so many flies which would buzz around in the warm summer days. When Frank and his mamma went out for their pleasant walks, Frank always called "Goosie," and Mongoose followed like a dog. No wonder the country youngsters were envious.

He was kept shut up nights, but one night he poked out some way with his sharp nose.

Next morning the farmer said to his wife:

"I told you so!"

But she said, "Hush! don't say anything," and gathered up the chicken feathers before the boarders were stirring.

Then Frank wondered "why Goosie hadn't an appetite for his breakfast," and the servant girl grinned.

Goosie had one harmless taste which Frank quite understood. He was very fond of sweets.

"Come here, Goosie," Frank invited whenever a box of candy came, and the mongoose would perch on his shoulder, getting pretty nearly every other piece, taking the candy in his claws in real human fashion.

Mrs. Belden liked the country so well that they staid into the autumn, to see the beautiful changing leaves.

Then something sad occurred. Frank was taken suddenly ill. The biggest of the city doctors came out, and said he could not go away from the farmhouse for many weeks.

It is no wonder then that Mrs. Belden sits down in her beautiful room, she likes to take her pet boy's pet in her arms, and let it curl around her neck. But her eyes look far away, and she is not thinking so much about Goosie, as about little Frank, and when he will be able to go home again.—Helen A. Hawley, in Little Men and Women.

Risk on the Rail.

The Board of Trade of England has just issued an official publication giving a list of the number of accidents to the 845,000,000 passengers carried by railways in that country during 1891. The lives lost from causes beyond the control of the travelers numbered five, the lowest figure in any year on record. The classified list of accidents shows that engines or cars meeting with obstructions or derailments from defects in the permanent way are slowly diminishing. In 1881 were twenty-four such cases. In 1890 there were five and last year six. The greatest number of accidents, amounting to twenty-five, came under the head of collisions within fixed signals at stations or sidings. With regard to derailments, two of the accidents were due to the points of the switches not being altered after the passage of previous trains, one was due to a point damaged by a previous train, one was caused by the failure of a cast-iron girder, one was due to carelessness on the part of the engineer of a relief train, and one was due to unknown causes. Inadequate braking power was responsible for twelve accidents, and fogs and storms for the same number also. In eight instances fault is found with a defective system of train dispatching, want of telegraphic communication, or lack of a block system. Purely mechanical causes, apart from human error, scarcely appear at all, and it would thus seem, says the Engineer, in commenting on these returns, to be within human power to work the railways without any accident whatever. While few railway officials will probably subscribe to this conclusion of our English contemporary, the figures produced by the Board of Trade certainly show that abroad as well as in the United States too many accidents can be traced to negligence, want of care, or mistakes on the part of officers or servants.

Smart Newspaper Men.

"It's mighty hard work getting any free advertising out of you newspaper people, nowadays," sighed the advance agent of a mammoth allied circus as he passed a stack of coin over the business-office counter the other morning.

"Space is space," replied the affable cashier, as he made out a receipt.

"I dont know why it is," continued the A. A., retrospectively, "but somehow editors don't seem to bite as they used to. Same on the Eastern coast, too I noticed it particularly on a little snap I worked way down at Galveston last fall."

"How was that?"

"Well, you see, I was on my way to that city by steamer a week in advance of our show, when I struck a great scheme. I bought two dozen pop bottles and as many steaks from the steward. Then I got a lot of arsenic from the medical stores and rubbed it into the steaks. I put some of our bills in the bottles, tied a steak round each and dropped 'em overboard as we entered the harbor. My calculation was that the sharks would swallow the meat, be poisoned, float ashore, would be cut open, the bills found, and the whole thing be written up by the reporters in great shape."

"How did it work?"

"Like a charm—my part of it, I mean. Nine sharks altogether stood in with the show, but every time one came ashore I got a note from every editor in the place, proposing to write the thing up, with a snap camera cut of the shark, at the regular rates."

"Pretty mean, that."

"Mean—those fellows could give Shylock cards and spades. The only paper that referred to it at all was one we gave sixty-four free passes to. The day we left town it remarked that our show was enough to kill a blind nigger—let alone sharks."

And the colossal aggregator sighed deeply and drifted out.—San Francisco Examiner.

Frugalism.

Vegetarians are elated by the fact that within the last twenty-five years the fruit-producing resources of the United States have increased just ten times as fast as the meat-producing resources. Apples, oranges and grapes are getting cheaper from year to year, while meat is getting dearer, thus, as it were, bribing a short-sighted generation to relinquish their flesh-pots and try the panacea of Dr. Bronson Alcott. That much desired consummation could, no doubt, be greatly promoted by dropping the name of vegetarianism with its water cresses and root house suggestiveness. Out of ten flesh eaters nine could be persuaded to test the merits of baked apples for one who would under any circumstances consent to try the specific of King Nebuchadnezzar. And seriously speaking, there is not a vestige of proof that adults of our species were ever intended to feed on "vegetables," in the green grocer's sense of the word. If we admit the axiom that our natural diet should consist chiefly of substances that can be eaten without repugnance in the condition we receive them from the hands of nature, cabbage and spinach are every whit as objectionable as pork sausages. Man, according to all the evidence of his dentition and the structure of his digestive apparatus, is not an herbivorous, but a frugivorous, animal, and our dietetic reformers should adopt the name of Frugalista.—Felix L. Oswald.

Care of the Voice.

No class of human habitation is so well fitted for voice culture as the flat.

No time is so good for practice as your neighbors' afternoons at home.

No really fine effects are produced upon the world at large until the voice has been used from six to ten hours continually. It is then that people are moved—that is, are glad to move.

Only affected singers ever allow a cold to stand between themselves and a chance to show off.

Great care should be exercised in the selection of a piano for accompaniment. It should be pitched exactly three notes below the voice. Anything beyond that must inevitably result in serious impairment of the musical taste.

Do not ask the opinion of unbiased critics relative to your singing.

Consult such as owe you money or those whose social position depends upon your pleasure.

Every time you hear of a charitable entertainment volunteer to sing. It places those in charge in a delicate position which they cannot fail to enjoy.

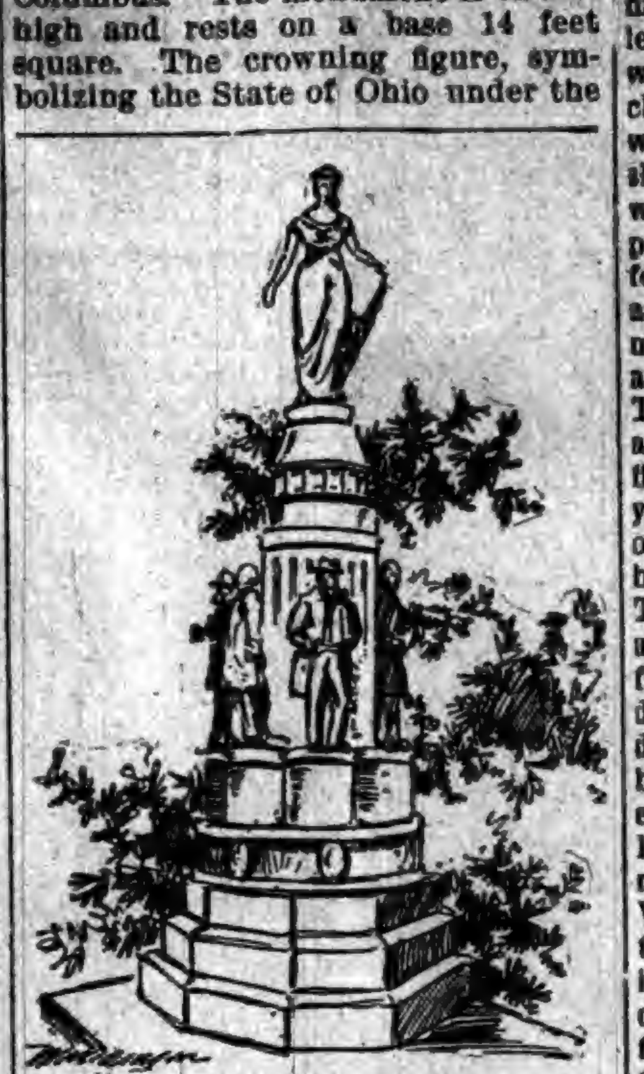
Never sing after going to bed. It is apt to make trouble.

Do not expect an offer to go on the stage inside of two months after you begin to train your voice. Disappointment injures the vocal chords.—Detroit Tribune.

OHIO'S MONUMENT.

The Buckeye State Erects a World's Fair Shaft at a Cost of $25,000.

Ohio has erected a monument in front of the State Building on the Fair grounds, Chicago, which when the Exposition is over with will be set up permanently in the city of Columbus. The monument is 31 feet high and rests on a base 14 feet square. The crowning figure, symbolizing the State of Ohio under the guise of the famous Roman matron, Cornelia, is ten feet tall, and the figures around the shaft measure seven feet and represent "Ohio's Greatest Sons"—Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Garfield, Chase and Stanton. The cost of the monument is $25,000.



OHIO'S WORLD'S FAIR MONUMENT.

Cost of Bad Roads.

The Board of Trade in a Tennessee town, in a recent memorial to the legislature, demonstrated, according to the Engineering Magazine, that bad roads were costing the people of that commonwealth more than $7,000,000 annually. Professor W. W. Carson, of the University of Tennessee, after careful investigation, found the average cost of hauling to the Knoxville market by wagon to be $7.50 per ton—aggregating $1,250,000 a year on the total tonnage hauled. He maintained that this hauling could have been done for half the sum over good dirt roads and for one-sixth of it over good macadam roads, saving $1,000,000 annually. Professor Richard T. Ely, of the Johns Hopkins University and Secretary of the American Economic Association, affirmed that poor roads cost this country over $20 a horse, and Prof. Jenks, of Knox College, Illinois, thinks $15 a horse a low estimate for this loss. Mr. Hord, a former Commissioner of Agriculture for the State of Tennessee, estimated the number of hores, mules and asses in that State, in 1889, at 476,000. The number has increased since his estimate, but taking this number and the lowest estimated loss per horse, say $15, and an aggregate loss of $7,140,000 a year for one State is shown. From tables calculated by Professor Carson, for an agricultural experiment station, it was shown that on gravel a horse will draw nearly one-and-a-half times the load, and on macadam, over three times the load he can draw on a dirt road. Of course there is great economy of drawing power in the proper grading of roads, and disregard of this fact has wasted large quantities of money in the road building of the past. The greater speed attained on scientifically graded and patent race tracks illustrates the advantages of grade.

The Cigarette Evil.

Considering what very poor things cigarettes are, it is surprising that they should have got such a hold on the community. But, bad as they are, they are extremely fascinating. The use of them, when carried to excess, becomes a habit that is most difficult to break, while they are so cheap and so convenient that it takes exceptional discretion to smoke them at all without smoking them to a deleterious extent. Of course it is primarily because they are so cheap that they appeal so generally to boys; but even with boys, who ought not to be allowed to smoke at all, it is not so much the tobacco in the cigarette that does the mischief as the pestilent and insinuating practice of inhaling the smoke. An ordinary boy of wholesome appetites won't smoke cigars or pipe tobacco enough to do him serious damage, even if he can get them. Nor would the cigarettes he might smoke be so serious a menace to his welfare if he would only smoke them as he would smoke cigars. The trouble is that as soon as he gets used to cigarette-smoking he begins to inhale the smoke, and presently is fixed in a habit that plays the mischief with him.

Whether anything besides tobacco goes into ordinary cigarettes is a much-discussed question. The effect they sometimes produce on the brain is so different from that due to tobacco in other forms as to favor the theory that many of them contain opium or valerian; but this the manufacturers deny, usually asserting that such drugs are too expensive to put into cheap cigarettes, even if it helped their marketable qualities. One thing besides the tobacco obviously goes into them, and that is the paper, the fumes of which are doubtless bad for the throat and lungs as far as they go.—Harper's Weekly.

A Famine Factory.

Major F. H. Law, an attache of the British Embassy at St. Petersburg, states as the result of personal investigations, that the famine of eastern and northern provinces is apt to become a chronic evil. The agricultural communities of the Empire are managed on a plan which compels the cultivators of the soil to give up his farm every third year, and, as a consequence the productive capacity of the land is being rapidly exhausted. Moreover, the forests of the Ural border have been cut away by millions of acres, and the cold northeast winds now sweep unobstructed over the open plains of the Volga country, and cover the fields with ruinous sand drifts.

Animal Music Lovers.

Dogs find music trying, and evince their displeasure at a particularly shrill note by lugubrious howls. Yet they are often taught to dance to violin, pipe or drum. Cats have little natural liking for music; but the taste can be acquired. A certain pet cat, though as a kitten indifferent to music, grew to like it, and regularly led the way to the piano when tea was over. Here she took post on a chair, and listened gravely during the whole performance. When it ceased, she would go to sleep. A dog of the writer's acquaintance was not so appreciative. His master's vocal efforts were not calculated to inspire admiration, and Bruno became almost furious whenever the performances commenced in his presence. The expression "commenced" is used advisedly, for those songs were never finished, and, indeed, rarely got beyond the bar raised against the bars of the executant by the dismal howling of that intelligent quadruped. The keeper of a menagerie was once asked whether the band had any effect on the animals. "To be sure it does," said he; "they like it, and it does them good. Confined in show boxes, they degenerate for want of exercise, do what we will with them. But it would be very much worse, I reckon, if it were not for the music. When they hear the band strike up, they rouse themselves, and begin taking what exercise they can, the beast of prey by walking backward and forward, and the others by repeating the movements natural to them when at liberty. The birds will begin to chatter and plume themselves at the sound; and even the snakes, at times, will uncoil and rear up, and convince the people, who sometimes seem to doubt the fact, that they are living creatures."

Waste and Want.

A waste of flesh and a want of digestion. These go together. People who cannot assimilate the food they swallow must, of necessity, lose bodily substance. To remedy this, render digestion easy and thorough with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a tonic famed the world over for its strength and flesh-yielding qualities. Appetite and sleep are both impaired by indigestion, which begets nervous symptoms, heartburn, flatulence, irregularity of the bowels and palpitation of the heart—the latter often being erroneously attributed to disease of that organ. All these manifestations disappear when the Bitters is resorted to. Malaria, rheumatism, liver and kidney trouble are effectually counteracted by this superb corrective, which is not only effectual but permanent.

Hay and Forks.

To put hay in the mangers or racks with a steel-tined fork is dangerous. A safe fork may be made by shaving a stick of tough wood to the size of a fork handle. Split one end into three parts and back eighteen inches from the end. Fit an iron ring tight around the handle, just back of termination of the splits. Put blocks between the split parts to hold them apart as far as desired. Put small screws and pegs through the parts into the blocks to hold them in place. Make the parts round, round off their ends and the fork is done.

Breeding.

Breeding in and in may tend to fix the characteristics of certain strains, of families, but sooner or later the results will be lack of constitutional vigor. Those who adhere strictly to pedigree are better enabled to avoid in-breeding of the stock than those who do not. While pedigree of itself adds nothing to an animal as an individual, yet it distinctly points to the family to which the individual belongs, and enables the owner to arrive at a partial knowledge of its future performances.

The family physician. Mrs. Helen R. Shalters, 420 Walnut St., Reading, Pa., states: "We always use Salvation Oil for what it is recommended in place of a physician. It never fails."

Curious Plant.

The "angry tree" attains a height of from ten to twenty-five feet. It is found in Nevada, California and Arizonia. If disturbed by contact or moved by the wind it manifests signs of irritation, ruffling its leaves like the hairs of an angry cat and emitting a sickening odor.

What Color is Your Hair?

Children's hair grows more quickly than that of adults. Some say that light-haired people are longer lived than their brethren with dark locks, which is not so consoling to the latter, since more than half of the inhabitants of this country have dark brown hair.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

What Are They Good For?

Mud baths were common among the ancients, the mud on the seashore and the slime of rivers being especially prized for this purpose. The Tartars and Egyptians still use them in certain diseases. They are taken by people at many places on the continent of Europe, among which may be named Driburg, Eilsen, Neundorf, Pyrmont, Spa, Marienbad, Franzensbraum, Eger, Kissingen, and Teplitz.

CLEANLINESS, exercise, and diet are the cardinal virtues of good health. Take care of the first two, and if you know how and what to eat you need never be ill. It is claimed that Garfield Tea, a simple herb remedy, overcomes the results of wrong living.

Takes High Rank as a Tall Story.

The growth of electric traction in the States reminds one of the farmer who was discovered standing at the foot of a cornstalk with eyes raised in anxiety.

"How's your corn?" he was asked.

"I don't know. Sent one of my boys up to see and the cornstock is growing up faster than he can climb down."—Transport.

IT IS WELL TO GET CLEAR OF A COLD the first week, but it is much better and safer to rid yourself of it the first forty-eight hours—the proper remedy for the purpose being Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant.

Tell This to the Marines.

The average life of American-built ships is eighteen years, while French ships last twenty years, Dutch twenty-two, German twenty-five, British twenty-six, Italian twenty-seven. The average death rate of the world's shipping is about 4 per cent and the birth rate 4 per cent.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn, Ind. tf

HEART DISEASE 30 YEARS.

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.
Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

WATERLOO.

Rev Crouse of Butler, was here Monday.

Willie Campbell from Auburn was here Tuesday.

The iron bridge east of town is said at last to be completed.

Wm. Bigler has this week removed his household goods to Hudson.

Louie Patterson, who has been visiting in Illinois and Iowa, returned Friday.

The ladies of the M. E. church held their social Wednesday afternoon at the parsonage.

Robert Lockhart and wife have been married thirty-five years, and celebrate their anniversary.

Both Saturday and Sunday night it was too cloudy too see the fine display in the heavens, hoped for.

A new barber shop has been opened in the building next south of Zerkle's grocery. The proprietor with his wife, are recently from Missouri.

Mr Fitzgerald who moved from here to Bryan, where he run a handle factory, has lost his factory by fire. Had he remained here perhaps the loss might not occurred.

Rev. Suman preached Sunday morning in the M. E. church, such a sermon as we seldom hear. The audience room was well filled, and closest attention given. There was nothing to excite the feelings for the time, but throughout it was food and drink to the hungry and thirsty—something to take home and live on. It was an unusual sight, but many were seen furtively wiping away the tears. Such sermons must be blessed to the salvation of souls.

It seems to be a fixed fact that the L. S. & M. S. railroad will soon put in a new "Y" west of the station house, and will also keep a yard engine. The pessimists look hopeless and say that will not do any good for Waterloo, while the optimists look bright and wide awake, and declare "this cannot hurt us, and may help beyond what we see, but we hope for much more." In any event the latter have the best of it, in that the one is more happy than the other in hoping Their happiness is also conducive to longevity.

BUTLER.

The ladies of the M. E. church were were quite successful in their Thanksgiving dinner.

Campbell, Fetter & Co., have absorbed another store, this time it is John Wyatt's stock at Newville, that they will perhaps mix into their stocks at Butler and Edgerton.

Some miscreant shot thrree holes through the stained glass windows of the M. E. church recently. It might have been accidental, but if so it was extremely careless.

Rev. Diffenbacn preached his farewell sermon at the Lutheran church last Sunday night. The house was well filled. He goes to a new field in Nebraska, and leaves many warm friends.

A very serious and what may prove a fatal accident occurred near the Lake Shore depot last Saturday morning. Eugene Griffith, son of Frank Griffith, living a short distance north of Hamilton, an employee in the U. S. railway mail service whose route lay between Cleveland and Chicago, was on the west bound fast mail that goes west about five o'clock in the morning. He has been in the habit of stopping in Butler with his cousin Henry Wilson's and has usually run to Kendallville, and then came back. The train was late on Saturday morning and it is supposed that he in some way lost himself, at all events he came out of the car as it passed Butler with hat, coat and lunch pail, and either intentionally, or accidentally lost his footing on the car steps, and fell or jumped from the train, that was running at the rate of forty or fifty miles an hour. He was picked up in an unconscious condition in about a half hour and at first was thought to be dead. Medical aid was procured and he rallied partially. He suffered a fracture of the skull and a broken nose, and although the best care and treatment has been given him, he remains in a very precarious condition, until Sunday evening, when indications were a little more hopeful. He is a bright young man about twenty years of age, and stood high in his employment.

CONCORD

Al Irvin was in St. Joe Monday.

Mrs. J. B. Gilford was to Auburn Friday.

Alice Draggoo was in St. Joe, Thursday.

Brent Phillips was at Hicksville, O., Saturday.

Bertha Hennessey was in St. Joe Thursday.

Dellie Koch came home from Warsaw Saturday.

Frank Draggoo was home from Auburn Sunday.

Richard Ervin sits with his heels high in his own house.

Will Baker has sawed several hundred fence pickets.

Henry and Anna Baker's infant baby boy died Sunday night.

Ira Eowen and wife are snugly domiciled in the Draggoo property.

J. B. Ricketts has caught the fever and is remodeling his house.

The protracted meeting at Fairview is still in progress with increasing interest.

Mrs. P. Bishop and grandma Beams of Spencerville, visited Mrs. B. Baker Wednesday.

Mrs. T. H. Murray of Spencerville, spent Saturday with her daughter, Mrs. C. H. Brown.

The couple that were to have been married Thanksgiving day must have forgotten their appointment.

Mary Morr came home from Garrett Tuesday accompanied by her two little nieces, Blanche and Vera Olinger.

Mrs. D. Y. Houck of Rehoboth, spent Sunday with her mother Mrs. E. Kiner, and her sister, Mrs. Edith Wingard.

If you want a good and a stylish hat call at the firm of Stafford & Hart, St. Joe. When in a rush they are assisted by Miss Ida.

Mrs. G. W. Draggoo has neuralgia; F. Buchanan and J. D. Smith have the rheumatism; Jim. Wyatt, the gout and Will Scott is love sick.

Mrs. Frank Herrick who has been in attendance with her sick daughter, Mrs. Nettie Culbertson, returned to her home in Maysville, Wednesday.

Quite a sensational accident occured to J. K. Stafford a few mornings ago when starting a fire in the furnace. Thinking the fire all out, he applied the oil. The first match proved no good, he scratched the second and ventured his hand inside the furnace, the oil quickly ignited and a volley of fire bursted out the open door, badly burning his right hand and his long whiskers.

ST. JOE.

G. W. Bleeks is making semi-weekly trips to Fort Wayne hauling hickory butts.

Mrs. Wineberger visited with a son and daughter at Delaware Bend over Thanksgiving.

Sam Warner has built himself a nice cosy home on a lot bought of Wm. Hart, he has it about ready to move into.

W. B. McClaren, of Frankfort, Ind., who has been visiting with friends in this vicinity for the past few days returned home last Friday.

M. T. Bishop made a flying trip to Springfield, Ohio, last week, he went to visit his son Frank, who is attending school at Wittenberg College.

C. A. Jenkins, who has been living on the O. H. Widney farm for the past three years will move to the Maxwell farm in Wilmington township sometime in the spring. His friends here are sorry to lose hime. Charley has a host of friends.

J. D. Leighty has been making some improvements in his residence this fall, and now has one of the best in town, he has added a hot water furnace to his other improvements and now every room is heated by steam. Jake never does anything by halves.

A number of our school teachers and scholars attended the Teachers' Association at Auburn last Friday and Saturday. Among them were Prof. Bates, Frank Rhodes, Georgie Vanfleet, Audry Woodcox, Fred Jenkins, Frank Hamilton, Charlie Johnson and Clarence Woodcox.

This part of the country has been, and still is being visited by some sneak of a chicken thief. On Tuesday night of last week G. W. Weedcox had 28 chickens and 4 turkeys taken, and the same evening Charlie Kimsey and Wier's lost an equal number. Wednesday night M T Bishop had his coop cleaned out entirely. Saturday night J. Ryan's coop was visited, lock broken and four taken.

Will some one rise up and tell us what is the trouble with the St. Joe News? There are a few people we are told who take no other paper except the St. Joe paper. Some of them are still wondering if Brother Williams ever received any return of the late elections. If he has he has either forgoten to set it up, or has concluded that the republicans are still voting and that he will print returns when they are done.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Kate Hult is slowly improving.

TRUSTS AND PROTECTION.

How Mr. Burrows Would Abolish Trusts by Giving Us "British Free Trade."

A doctrine which has found favor with certain of the protectionists in high prices is that where manufacturers engaged in a protected industry enter into a trust to raise prices the duty should be abolished and the advantages of protection thus withdrawn from the offenders. This remedy, it is openly proclaimed, will operate to bring the guilty parties to their senses and compel them to reduce prices to a more reasonable basis by reason of the competition admitted from abroad by the abolition of the protective duty. This doctrine has been openly advocated by Hon. Julius C. Burrows, the leader of the Republican minority on the ways and means committee in the recent session of congress.

But what does this mean? Do not Mr. Burrows and his followers see that their proposition to crush out trusts by abolishing duties gives away the whole case of protection as it is held and explained by the latter day school of McKinleyites? The view of McKinley, which he is never weary of reiterating at Republican conventions, in joint debates and at Chautauqua assemblies, is that the protective tariff lays a tax not upon our own people, but upon the foreigner.

But if McKinley's view is correct how can Burrows and his followers do any damage to our domestic trusts, whose name is legion, by abolishing duties? Their proposition to wipe out duties which serve as a protection to trusts is a direct confession that the tariff puts into the pockets of the domestic manufacturer profits which he would not otherwise be able to make. It means that the tariff raises the prices of domestic goods above what should be their normal level, that it enables the home manufacturer to plunder the home consumer, and that the tariff is thus a tax not only where we use imported goods, but also where we buy the domestic product. Alas, how sadly this demolishes the preposterous claim that the McKinley law has reduced the cost of living!

But if Burrows could carry out his idea where would he land us? Does he not know that his proposition would mean "British free trade" in nearly everything that we consume? He evidently does not know to what extent trusts and pools have permeated our industrial system. A recent publication gives 100 of these as mere "samples." There are trusts in anthracite coal and in axes; in barbed wire, boilers, boots and shoes, borax, brooms, brushes and buttons, and trusts all the way down the alphabet to wood screws, wool hats wrapping paper and yellow pine. There are, in fact, few important industries left in which trusts or "combines" of some sort do not exist, and Mr. Burrows' proposition to wipe them out by wiping out their protection would prove the most radical free trade measure of the present generation.

Democratic Savings.

Mr. Holman's review of the appropriations made during the last session of congress is thus summarized by the New York Evening Post (Ind.):

As the New York Tribune has shown, the record made by the Democrats at this session is sufficiently encouraging, savings amounting to some $40,000,000 having been made in those appropriations which it was possible to reduce. Mr. Holman further shows, what The Tribune had also pointed out, that this reduction was accomplished in the face of the opposition of the Republican senate.

The eleven regular appropriation bills as passed by the house reduced the estimates of the administration by $27,883,000, and the senate increased their amount by $18,725,000. The result was finally that these bills appropriated $22,000,000 less than was demanded by the administration, nearly $13,000,000 less than the senate desired, and nearly $6,000,000 more than the house deemed sufficient. The principal economies effected have been first in public buildings, no new ones having been authorized at this session. The previous congress authorized the construction of sixty-eight, much of the expense of which has had to be provided for by the congress which has just adjourned.

The last congress, Judge Holman says, created 1,705 new salaried offices, costing annually over $2,000,000. This congress has abolished more offices than it has created, except in the District of Columbia, and while it increased the wages of those employed in the life saving service, it elsewhere reduced more salaries than it raised. There has been a small increase in the amount appropriated for the judiciary, a considerable increase in that for the department of agriculture and a new charge in the subsidy granted to the World's fair. With these exceptions the policy of economy has on the whole prevailed. If it can be shown, and The Tribune and Mr. Holman concur in holding that it can, that the Democrats have made an important reduction in those appropriations which were under their control, that is a concrete fact which is worth a great deal in a political campaign.

A Republican Senator on Prices.

In the recent debate in the senate upon the report of the committee on finance on retail prices and wages one Republican senator was honest enough to admit the truth. In answer to the contention of Senator Aldrich that prices had fallen a fraction of 1 per cent. under the operation of the McKinley bill, Senator Stewart used the following language:

"Of course the tariff upon any article will raise the price of that article until there is competition produced here. Then it may cheapen it. But that the tariff would have an important effect to reduce prices is most ridiculous. Its first tendency is to advance prices. * * * No one ever before contended that a tariff would in the year it was enacted lower prices. On the contrary, it has not had that effect. It has not had that effect in reference to the McKinley act, because the prices in Europe have fallen lower than here. It has the effect to sustain prices here rather than lower them."

To prove the correctness of this view Senator Stewart then quoted from the London Economist as follows:

There has yet been no cessation of the fall in the prices of commodities which, generally speaking, have been steadily dwindling for the past couple of years. Throughout the whole of the first half of 1892 the quiet downward movement has been continued, with the result that our index number, representing the prices of twenty-two leading commodities, stands at the close of the half year at 2,081, and compares with immediately preceding half years thus:

	Index number.
July 1, 1892	2,081
Jan. 1, 1892	2,133
July 1, 1891	2,190
Jan. 1, 1891	2,224
July 1, 1890	2,259

Since the middle of 1890, therefore, the fall in prices, taken as a whole, has been about 7.9 per cent., while during the past half year the decline has equaled 2.4 per cent.

Mothers and Daughter.

Over twelve years ago I was afflicted with a very serious female difficulty, and for the last sixteen months was under treatment of three of the very best physicians that money could employ. Under their skillful treatment I gradually grew worse until they decided they could render me no permanent help. One of my friends persuaded me to try a bottle of Dullam's Great German Female Uterine Tonic and after taking three bottles, can say I am in better health than I have been for twenty years and am now sixty years old, but feel as young as at thirty.—$1 a bottle.

A Contractor's Advice.

MESSRS. DULLAM BROS.—Gentlemen:—I take great pleasure in testifying in behalf of Dullam's Great German Blood, Liver, Stomach and Kidney Cure. I can safely say that I never took such medicine as that to cleanse the liver, stomach and kidneys. I was suffering for years with biliousness, indigestion and loss of appetite and sleep. One bottle did for me more good than six months' other treatment, and I feel it my duty to testify in its behalf, so others may try it and get cured. Yours Truly,

Jno. W. Rowen, of Des Moines, Iowa, while snow bound at Carroll, Iowa, through exposure, contracted a severe cold. After several useless trials of various remedies he purchased a bottle Cubeb Cough Cure, and says the cure was magical, and after taking two doses he could breathe freely and enjoy a good sleep that night undisturbed. Another cure is on record where a lady had not slept more than one or two hours a night for months, who after using only one bottle, was well and happy.

A Much Married Woman.

Mrs. Fowler, of this city, was married last January to her sixth husband, and strange as it may seem, five of them died exactly two years from their marriage day. Her present husband has been sick for the last four months with chronic jaundice, and was given up by four of the best physicians; as a last resort he began using Sulphur Bitters, and yesterday told our reporter that they had saved his life, smilingly saying that he guessed Mrs. Fowler would be unable to take a seventh better half for some time to come. 4

Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1866—Continued.

Mention has been made of the uncertainty of currency and the usual drawback of counterfeit and worthless paper. All this was changed by the exigences caused by the war for the Union, which gave to the people the best paper money known, good for its face value always and everywhere.

It will be interesting to readers to recur to the medium of exchange in use in 1866 when gold and silver certificates had not been thought of and when our people were familiar with treasury notes, gold premiums and high prices, when a double eagle was a curiosity and a silver dollar, a rarity.

Gold is no longer a novelty, silver is a burden and an issue in politics, while the the national bank note and the once depreciated greenbacks are equal in value and superior in use to the specie which they represent.

The fractional currency to which in 1866 we had become accustomed, suddenly disappeared with the coming of silver, and with it went convenience for mailing and postage, to which the rising generation are strangers.

Knowing that these bits of paper bearing Spinner's unique signature would soon become curious menentoes of the past, not a few people retained and saved specimens, and there are several persons in Auburn, who have complete sets of the various issues from three cents to fifty. Taken in hand they bear one back in mind to their day when a compound interest note, a seven-thirty bond or a five-twenty six per cent bore evidence of the straits of the government and its fight for financial honor.

One day in the fall of 1866, two men came into the store of Case & Co, to settle some business, and one, to make a payment, drew from his pocketbook a roll of demand notes, the first issue of the government payable in gold. When the writer remarked the strangeness of seeing such preferred paper in circulation, the debtor awakened to knowledge of its value, hastily gathered them up, postponed settlement with his creditor and left the store. Some one, possibly himself, had hoarded them as others did gold, all the years of the war, when he could have got two or more to one in ordinary greenbacks, and was ignorantly paying them out as such when an exclamation of surprise gave him a clue to their character.

One issue of treasury notes bore upon the back the inscription, "exchangeable in U. S. 6 per cent bonds, etc." and Prof. Hodge and the writer got together $500, of them, wrote to the U. S. treasurer asking a bond as promised, in exchange, and received a brief reply that congress had annuled its promise and each bill thereafter bore evidence of a more solvent condition of the treasury. Greenback continue to be exempt from taxation. This exemption, a necessity to maintain credit during the war, has long been an outrage on the farmer, the tradesman and those of limited means since its provision favors those who should pay most and are most able to pay taxes.

Accustomed to inflated or high prices, people parted with their paper money freely in exchange for calico and muslin at twenty-five cents a yard, loaf sugar at the same price per lb., Rio coffee three pounds for a dollar; tea, $2.00 a pound; ladies' cloth, $2.00 per yard and other articles in the same proportion. A scarcity of salt occurring, the writer proceeded to Waterloo and bought at $3,00 a barrel about sixty barrels, all that he could find for sale and paying Isaac Roth the teamster 25 cents per barrel for hauling it to Auburn resold it at $3.25 cash on delivery for the benefit of customers.

As produce had a corresponding high price, the trade was not adverse, but the prices quoted stand out in marked contrast to those paid for the same articles in these days of railroad transportation and cheap, extensive manufacture.

Stimulated by the high prices for wool during the war, caused by the demand for clothing and blankets for a million of soldiers, sheep raising had greatly increased and the clip at a dollar a pound enriched many but as the demand ceased the price quickly fell away, and the flocks became unremunerative and a useless burden necessitating their decrease and often extinction.

Our well known townsman James Griswold then living on North Main street made it a business to buy sheep and slaughter them for pelts and tallow, saving for meat only the hind quarters and mutton became a drug without a market.

Deprived of this hitherto resource calculated to enrich their land as well as their pocket books, farmers looked about for some other to take its place and were met by John Stoner and others who established agencies at stores in the towns for the loan of flaxseed and a concerted movement to cultivate flax was attempted. Buildings were erected to manufacture the fiber, near Butler and at other points and considerable acreage was sown to this seed. The flax seed raised was bought at good prices, but the attempt to manufacture the fiber failed. The farmers returned to their staples of corn and wheat and the threatened exhaustion of land consequent to this crop was averted by the failure.

Howard Coe the sole publisher of a newspaper in Auburn, began the year hard pressed for funds, very few of those taking the DeKalb Democrat having paid their subscriptions. Whether patrons did or did not pay, the publisher who required paper, ink, etc., besides labor, found himself compelled to make payment in cash for his supplies with the alternative of suspension and each week was a crisis passed with unbroken faith that the future would see some degree of relief. Few unless they have themselves been through the experience can realize the strong pressure upon a county publisher for funds under these circumstances. To him a "Roll of Honor" bearing names of paying subscribers is no empty title and the reluctant notice to delinquents, is often a forced call for much needed help. In this light, it is not surprising that the necessities of Mr. Coe compelled him to give space in his limited columns to advertisements from abroad for the cash, he could not obtain at home.

Business houses in Butler, Ft. Wayne, and Toledo, dealers in dry goods, groceries, photographs, jewelry, booke, insurance and other interests, were represented in the Democrat and even with these foreign auxiliaries, the exigencies were hard to meet despite the fact that this paper was the sole exponent of Auburn's business interests.

Obituary.

Died, Dec. 4, 1892, at the residence of his daughter Elizabeth, Hunter, one mile north of Edgerton, Ohio. In the 91st year of his age, Peter Jennings. The deceased was born in Germantown, Hunterdon county, New Jersey, Sept. 13, 1802, he being the youngest of a family of seven children, two brothers and four sisters, who all lived to exteme old age except his sister Jemima, mother of Peter Helwig, of Butler. He grew up and received such education as the country afforded and at the age of 19 he removed with his father, (his mother died when he was a small boy), to Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, (now Carroll.) April 29th, 1829, in Tuscarawas county Ohio, he was united in marriage to Catharine Rainsburger with whom he enjoyed an unclouded married life for more than 50 years. To them were born eight children, six sons and two daughters, all surviving him, except his wife who died Feb. 50, 1881, and Jacob, who died the same year. He removed to DeKalb county in 1845, entering the land still owned by him; having to cut the timber to make room for his cabin which was displaced by a neat frame dwelling a few years later. His removal from New Jersey was in an old fashioned high box wagon. The same wagon was used in his removal to Indiana twenty years later. Portions of the same vehicle are yet to be seen at his old home. After the death of his wife he remained in his old home. A faithful attachee of the family, Mrs. Villa Ogel, kept the old place in order untill the fall of 1891 when age and lack of sight had so enfeebled him that he gave up housekeeping and went to live with his daughter Elizabeth Hunter, where the last year of his life was passed in peaceful quietude. His funeral took place from Wittenberg Chapel just east of his old home Dec. 5. 1892, Rev, Baher officiating. His remains were laid to rest in the Farnum cemetery about one mile farther east. Uncle Peter Jennings as he was familiarly known for the past forty years, was a man of even disposition of sterling honesty, who could not have been persuaded to have done a wrong. A man whose actions the writer has never heard criticised and whose life the breath of calumny has never tainted. Clever and kind to all who knew him, hospitable in the extreme, frugal and industrious he gathered a large estate: friendly and affectionate, his children reverenced him. He was not a member of any church yet he was a practical christian and his voice was heard in prayer and praise both in his own home and in church near by. His was a quiet home life and his memory will long be cherished by all who knew him.

FULL OF FRESH FACTS.

ALL RELATING TO PEOPLE AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger Burned Out—Canada's New Cabinet—Financial Crash in Mississippi—Pugilist Mitchell Gone to Jail—Small Pox in Chicago.

A BIG FIRE.

It Breaks Out in the Public Ledger Building, Philadelphia.

The Public Ledger building, a massive six story brown stone front structure, on the southeast corner of Sixth and Chestnut Streets, Philadelphia, and running through to Sansom Street was damaged by fire to the extent of $200,000, of which $150,000 is sustained by the Ledger and $50,000 by tenants.

The Ledger's insurance aggregated $240,000—$130,000 on the building and $80,000 on contents. The other occupants are believed to be fully insured. The collection of curious articles in the office of Mr. George W. Childs, the Ledger's owner and publisher, which are inestimable in value, were saved. The damage to the building, which is partly gutted, is $100,000.

The facilities of every printing office in the city were offered to Mr. Childs and after Mr. W. M. Singerly, president of the Record Publishing Company, had personally tendered the use of his plant, the offer was accepted, and, until further arrangements shall be made, the Ledger will be issued from the Record office.

Mr. Childs and A. J. Drexel were witnesses of the fire and will send a check for $5,000 to the department.

CANADA'S NEW CABINET.

The Thompson Cabinet Will Contain Some Influential Persons.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: The following is given out as the correct personnel of the new Thompson administration: Premier Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson; Minister of Finance, G. E. Foster; Minister of Public Works, J. A. Quimet; Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mackenzil Bowell; Minister of Railways and Canals, John Haggart; Postmaster General, Sir Adolphe Caron; Minister of the Interior, T. M. Daly; Minister of Militie, J. C. Patterson; Minister of Agriculture, A. R. Angers; Minister of Marine and Fishery, S. C. H. Topper; Secretary of State, John Costigan; President of the Counsel, William B. Ivers; Minister without Portfolios, Sir John Abbott, Frank Smith, and John Darling; Comptroller of Customs, M. C. Wallace; Comptroller of Land Revenue, J. F. Wood; Solicitor General, J. J. Curran.

Charlie Mitchell Is in Jail.

London special: Charlie Mitchell, the prize fighter, has succeeded in getting into jail. On Mitchell's personal application at the Clerkenwell sessions, Sir Peter H. Edlin consented to confirm the previous sentence, and commit Mitchell to jail for two months at hard labor with the added costs of the appeal to be paid by the prisoner. Mitchell, in terror of a severer sentence at the hands of Sir Peter, who does not like bruisers, has been going about the police courts and the jail, begging to be allowed to serve the sentence from which he had appealed. He is now gratified.

Nelson Is Reinstated.

The stallion Nelson and his owner, C. H. Nelson, were reinstated by the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association at a meeting held at the Murray Hill Hotel, New York. The resolution adopted by the board is as follows: "Ordered that the horse Nelson be reinstated, but inasmuch as the conduct of C. H. Nelson, since his expulsion, has not been blameless, but open to just criticism, the said C. H. Nelson, be reinstated temporarily during good behavior."

Able to Protect Herself.

Mrs. Lamond, teacher of physical culture at St. Mary's School, on Central avenue, Indianapolis, in company with two other teachers of that institution, was walking past the Central Avenue Methodist Church the other evening, when a colored man suddenly snatched at her pocketbook and started off on a run. The female professor pursued and with a well directed blow landed the footpad in the gutter and recovered her purse.

Financial Crash.

Greenville. Miss., is in the throes of a financial panic. The large banking firm of L. & N. Wileseinsni collapsed with liabilities estimated at $500,000. The failure caused the wildest excitement. The other banks expecting a run, compelled depositors to give the statutory notice before withdrawing deposits. Several other small firms were compelled to make assignments, and there is a possibility that more will follow.

Small Pox at Chicago.

Edmund C. Ingalls, a young medical student living in Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, is afflicted with a disease said to be genuine but mild small pox. Ingalls contracted the disease while pursuing a scientific investigation.

Will Try and Fast Fifty Days.

Arthur W. Wuiltmeau, a young Frenchman, has started on a fifty-day fast, at Cleveland, Ohio. The trial is being made under the supervision of the Western Reserve University. Physicians constantly guard the faster, who is to have no nourishment but water. He has been training for the fast during the past month, and started in weighing 133 pounds. He expects to lose about nine pounds during his fast.

One Thug Less in St. Louis.

At St. Louis, James Cleary was shot by some unknown person and died. He came from Bay City, Mich., and, according to his own confession, was a crook. Before he died he said that while he was standing on the levee he saw a well-dressed man approaching him whom he intended to rob. He held the man up, but the stranger then shot him in the back.

Want the Hatch Bill Passed.

The Georgia Legislature adopted resolutions asking Congress to pass the Hatch anti-option bill. The Legislatures of Alabama and South Carolina will probably do likewise.

VOLUME IS SMALLER.

Gold Exports and Gould's Death Have Depressed Stocks.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

The beginning of gold exports in November and their expected continuance, the death of Mr. Gould, and the unfavorable reports from the silver conference, have somewhat affected all speculative markets. There are also some symptoms of diminished activity in business, and while manufacturers are generally occupied with orders taken some time ago there is more complaint that new orders do not come forward as was expected. While the volume of trade is still large, it is not surprising that there should be somewhat less activity during the remainder of the year except in holiday lines. At the same time there is general confidence that early next year will be lively and prosperous. A setback in speculation would be by no means an unmixed evil, but there are no signs of disturbance at present, though money markets are working a little closer.

GOULD IS DEAD.

The Greatest Financier of America Has Finished His Work.

Jay Gould, the greatest financier that the United States has ever known, died at New York Friday morning. His end was peaceful. Twelve hours before his death he was prostrated by a nervous attack, and his physician, Dr. Munn, was summoned. Every member of the Gould family was also summoned, and they watched by his bedside until the end came. The death of the great financier inspired unusual regret, but it did not cause any sensational break in the stock market, in which for twenty years he was the most important figure. The market was not even shaken, mainly because Mr. Gould had provided against it by placing his immense holdings in the hands of men whose integrity he trusted. There was no considerable sale of securities known as Gould stocks, and no attempt to force a panic was made.

The Talk of the Town.

The talk of Minneapolis' business world is the gossip which connects the names of George A. Morse, the well-known real-estate dealer, Elisha Morse, his father, and other well-known business men and financiers with $125,000 worth of negotiable paper whose genuineness is disputed. The signature which is in dispute is that of Elisha Morse and the alleged forgeries are on the reverse side of the notes negotiated by George A. Morse, who has been in business for several years and has always stood high in the business world.

Cleveland for an Extra Session.

Among well-informed Democrats the impression exists that President-elect Cleveland has practically made up his mind that an extra session of Congress will be necessary. The men who have formed that opinion do not belong to the class of mind-reading politicians, but they believe an extra session will be called because of things Mr. Cleveland said before starting on his shooting trip. To one of these he disclosed his conviction that it would be impossible to avoid an extra session, because of the condition of the treasury.

Buck Olsen Is Executed.

At Dorchester, N. B., Buck Olsen, who is declared by officers to be the notorious Buck Wheaton, of Chicago, was executed Thursday morning. Prayers for the dying man were read at the scaffold. "Buck" took his stand by the dangling noose, shook hands with the hangman, then with the priests, and then told the sheriff to "Let 'er go." Wheaton's crime was the shooting of Policeman J. B. Steadman at Moncton, N. B., August 1st, while resisting arrest.

Saved by a Miracle.

The steamer Spree, several days overdue at New York, has been towed into Queenstown with a broken shaft by the Dominion steamer Lake Huron. For two days and two nights the Spree rolled helplessly in the trough of a wild sea, her stern sunk so low that the water could be reached from her deck. The 600 passengers aboard behaved admirably, but hope was nearly abandoned when the rescuing sail was sighted.

Pole Raisers Thwarted by a Girl.

At Tiffin, Ohio, the Central Union Telegraph Company's employes attempted to erect a pole in front of the Fisher residence, when Miss Rebecca Fisher ordered them to desist. They paid no attention, and she secured a shovel and, taking her stand by the workmen, filled up the hole faster than two men could excavate it. The men finally became discouraged and that hole is yet to be dug.

Confessed Guilt by Resigning.

Superintendent David Fensler, of the Allen County (Ohio) Infirmary, resigned during an investigation of his manner of conducting the institution. He was charged with mismanagement and bad treatment of inmates. The affair was of a very sensational nature, but he ended the proceedings by resigning.

Bank Wreckers Must Answer.

President Graves and Cashier Harris, of the defunct Commercial National Bank of Dubuque, must explain false entries in the reports to the Comptroller of the Currency, by means of which the bank was enabled to fail with liabilities of nearly $500,000.

Suicide of a Well-known Denver Man.

James T. Wilbur, business manager for Henry Lee, Denver, dealer in seeds and farm implements, committed suicide by first taking morphine and then hanging himself. He leaves a wife and three daughters, all prominent in society.

THE PEOPLE'S DEMAND.

SIMPLY ASK TO HAVE THE TAX BURDEN LIGHTENED.

They Want a Tariff for Revenue Bill Substituted for the Obnoxious McKinley Measure—Jerry Rusk's Report—Concerning an Extra Session.

A Rational Programme.

The demands of the people are simple and explicit. They ask to have their tax burdens lightened by the substitution for the obnoxious McKinley bill of a tariff for revenue bill without any intentional protection in it, because they have declared in unmistakable tones that "protection is a fraud" and is unconstitutional. The Democratic party has been commissioned to enact this new law. Let it act without unnecessary delay. What now will be a rational course to pursue?

1. Free raw materials. If the present Senate does not yield somewhat to the wishes of the people and pass the bills it has now pigeon-holed, giving us free wool, free tin-plate, free cotton ties, free binding twine, and the bills that the present Congress will quickly pass as soon as there is a prospect that they may pass the Senate, giving us free sugar, free lumber and free ores, an extra session should be called for this purpose. Any other course will be a disappointment to the people, who wish as soon as possible to obtain the benefits promised. This part of the programme has been practically settled by the Democratic leaders in Congress and upon the stump. The pledges to the people must be redeemed. It is both politic and just that this be done at once. The benefits of free raw material are so great and the revenue derived from the present duty on them so small that no delay should be occasioned even for the important considerations of revenue. The politicians and the papers that advocate delay will incur the displeasure of the people.

2. The necessity of raising a revenue of about $300,000,000 a year—an amount that no administration, however economic, can greatly reduce—makes it essential that the important revenue-bearing clauses of a new tariff bill receive considerable attention. But even in drafting a new bill, there is no necessity in the present case, if the proper men and methods are employed, of wasting six months or a year's time in holding "tariff hearings." Enough of these have already been held. The data at hand will enable tariff experts like Congressman Wm. L. Wilson, John DeWitt Warner, Wm. M. Springer, Benton McMillin, and Senators Roger Q. Mills and John G. Carlisle to frame a bill that will give the people the maximum amount of relief with the minimum amount of friction to business and at the same time produce the required revenue. These men not only have the confidence but know the needs of the people; they also know where and how to levy duties in each case to produce the desired effects. Such men as these can in a few weeks, or at most two or three months, prepare a bill that both in its revenue and administrative qualities will be incomparably superior to the conglomerate McKinley bill confusedly thrown together by inexperienced tariff makers, after they had spent many months consulting the selfish and conflicting interests of their rich manufacturing constituents. Even if the McKinley tariff makers had consulted the welfare of the people and the bill had been founded on just principles, we want no more such confused and discordant bills patched up by tariff botches.

Give us relief, and give it as soon as possible!

Rusk's Antediluvian Report.

In his annual report, of which an abstract has been furnished by the Associated Press, Secretary Rusk prattles away as egotistically and as volubly as if a political revolution had not extinguished most of his familiar fads. He parades the enormous excess of last year's exports over imports—exceeding $200,000,000—and proudly claims for his department a large share of the credit for this "gratifying" result. It was his department that sent the sun and the rain that gave us bountiful harvests; and it was his department that caused the famished people of Europe to draw hence their needed bread. But the genial Secretary indirectly confesses that Providence had some little share with him in this matter in mentioning that the wheat exports from Russia this season have materially lessened the exports of that cereal from the United States.

The Secretary finds a convincing proof of the wisdom of the policy of the Government, and of his department in particular, in the fact that of the exports from the United States last year 80 per cent. consisted of agricultural products. While the surplus products of the farm were sent abroad, the surplus products of the workshop, and of the factory were kept at home. But the Secretary naively deplores the fact that $27,000,000 in hides, $40,000,000 in animal products, $67,000,000 in hemp, flax, jute, cotton and other fibers, and $30,000,000 in fruits and wines, were imported last year. With proper encouragement and "protection" of the Government, he thinks, all these commodities could be produced in our own land. What gives him especial concern is the present annual importation of $25,000,000 worth of raw silk, all of which could be produced here if the paternal government should devote its attention to this branch of industry. But the good Secretary does not say whether he would have American farmers' wives adopt the tender method of the women in the interior of China for nourishing and raising the silk cocoons.

After the 4th of March Secretary Rusk may have leisure to develop at length the plans for the cheap production of raw silk; for raising hides in excess of the needed supplies of beef; for making champagne and Rhine wine, and for rearing tropical fruits under the auspices of the paternal government. But for the execution of these plans he will have to wait for a return of paternalism; and the late elections have given grandmotherly government a blow from which it is not likely to recover in this generation. — Philadelphia Record.

An Extra Session.

The Dry Goods Economist is taking great pains to get the opinions of leading merchants, manufacturers, and business men in its line on the "extra session" question. Its issue of Nov. 19 contains replies from about ninety of these prominent business men in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other cities. Editorially the Economist says: "We find that thirty of the contributors definitely favor the calling of an extra session of Congress, forty definitely oppose it. The rest fail to express themselves with sufficient positiveness to be ranged on either side of the controversy. These proportions would seem to indicate a very decided feeling against an early revision of the tariff, but when the reasons given for many of these negative votes are studied, the result does not seem so conclusive."

Then, after showing how flimsy are the reasons of those opposed to an extra session, it gets at the kernel of the question by saying that "there can be but one intelligible motive for putting off the consideration of the subject, and that is the natural desire of highly protected manufacturers to hold as long as possible the special advantages which the nation has ordered to be removed. It may fairly be urged, therefore, that there should not be any avoidable delay, even of a single day, in beginning the deliberate, careful work which in any case must be done."

The Economist, however, thinks that a tariff commission, arranged for by the present Congress, can prepare a bill which can be passed as soon as the Fifty-third Congress reassembles. The tariff commission plan is good; but why keep the people waiting fifteen months, when it is possible to stop the "protection fraud" in six months. If the same two-thirds of the American voters who voted against "protection" could have voted as to how much longer they would prefer to be robbed, is it likely that they would have said "until July, 1894?"

The Danger of Delay.

Any change in a tariff schedule necessarily affects different industries and businesses, some favorably and others unfavorably. The minimum of injury and the maximum of benefit occurs when, after a revision has been determined upon, it is without delay given definite form and made law. Uncertainty as to what changes will be made causes capitalists to hesitate to invest in new enterprises and is almost ruinous to business. Hence it is important that the pending revision be made as quickly as is consistent with thoroughness. Thousands of wage-earners will suffer by unnecessarily prolonging the agony of business men.

Party policy also demands promptness. Immediately after putting a new tatiff law in force, and before business has been adjusted to it, there cannot but be disturbances in business. To have these come on the eve of the Congressional election of 1894, as in the regular order of procedure, they would surely do, would be to incur the greatest possible opposition and to invite defeat. Partisan instinct therefore dictates that the shortest road to a revenue tariff be taken.

On this subject the New York World says:

"No necessary deliberation must be shirked, for no serious error must be made. But, this deliberation in the preparation and in the necessary discussion of a drafted bill after it is reported must all be got through with as soon as practicable, for three commanding reasons:

"1. The people are entitled to early relief from the hard conditions which the McKinley law imposes.

"2. The business of the country has a right to know as soon as may be to what conditions its enterprises for the future must conform.

"3. The law must have been in operation long enough before the next election to enable all the people to have palpable evidence of its advantages.

"How these ends are to be attained without an early extra session of the new Congress we are unable to discover."

Wind Up This Cordage Trust.

W. C. Boone, Jr., a Brooklyn manufacturer of cordage and binder twine machinery, who has been subsidized for five years by the cordage trust, so that he could not sell machinery to outsiders, announces in the last Cordage Trade Journal that he can now again contract to supply machinery to equip new plants. Meanwhile the cordage trust is at its old tricks concerning the supply of manila and sisal fiber, hoping in this way to close up opposition factories or to put them in a position which will enable the trust by shrewd management, as the Cordage Trade Journal says, "to exterminate a considerable amount of competition during the season following." The trust must work quickly. The people have declared against it. As soon as the machinery of a new administration can be put in motion, trusts, or at least tariff trusts like this one, can make no more raids on the American people. Cordage manufacturers will then have free raw material; no other protection is necessary. They cannot, however, then expect to make profits of 10 per cent. and have $1,000,000 to add to their "large surplus," as the trust expected to do in 1892, and, as judged by the high prices of cordage, it has fully accomplished.

Bright Prospects for Wool.

Following are some points obtained from one of our leading wool merchants which are opportune and well describe the situation: "In the New York wool market there is a decided evidence of reaction from the disappointment and depression which immediately followed the election. Manufacturers are here in very large numbers, in the first place to consult with their commission houses, but also to take advantage of any weak spots that they can find. There seems to be an impression growing that the election means free wool, but duties retained on manufactured goods. If this proves to be the case, of course it will still further help every American manufacturer."

Manufacturers, one and all, seem to be using the election as a lever to push down prices, but they show too great an anxiety to do this and not the indifference which indicates slow trade.—Dry Goods Economist, Nov. 19th.

Still Prescribing McKinleyism.

McKinley has done more for tariff reform than almost any other living man. His optimistic disposition, coupled with his reputation (not altogether deserved) as a tariff maker and for oratory, enables him to draw a good house. Thousands of men, and women, too, who have given but little attention to tariffs have attended McKinley's meetings only to be disappointed with the Major's absurd and illogical foreigner-pays-the-tariff ideas of economics. The landslide that slid on Nov. 8 slid slickest in the wake of McKinley, where he had greased the track for it.

Most gratifying news comes from the post mortem conferences being held everywhere. Fully aware that the late Republican party met its death by an overdose of McKinleyism, the doctors nevertheless continue to inject the same medicine into the corpse and profess to believe that they will be able to resuscitate it by 1896. McKinley told the Executive Committee of the Ohio League of Republican Clubs the other day that "All that we have to do, now that we have lost the election, is to get ready for the next fight. Our principles are just as clear for us as ever, and they are just as essential to prosperity and to the country." This Ohio club renewed its allegiance to the principles of "protection" and resolved to continue to fight on these lines. The American Economist says it is going to continue its work of propagating the doctrine of protection. It is even more optimistic than Major McKinley. It says: "The election this year shows a gain in the popular vote for protection, a gain in Republican members of Congress, but not gain enough to overtop the canvass of two years ago. We are going up, not down."

It is most fortunate for this country that the Bourbons of the Republican party are going to dictate its future policy, and that they will continue to butt the almost brainless and conscienceless head of their party against a stone wall until life is extinct. The gods are doing their duty by the g. o. p. Its madness will lead it to certain destruction, and the sooner it reaches there the better for this nation.

The Immigration Evil and Protection.

The Mail and Express, of this city, a rabid protectionist organ, conducted in the interests of trusts and monopolies, in its issue of Nov. 8, on page 2, printed these glaring headlines, giving them particular prominence: "Heavy Decrease in Exports—Workmen Are Having Very Hard Times All Over Europe Just Now." This tells the story of the adverse effects of protection, falsely so called, upon American industries and wage-earners, in a most effective manner. The simplicity of the argument is its most striking feature. Protection enhances prices at home and decreases consumption abroad of those commodities we would gladly sell to foreign nations. The logical result is that thousands of workmen in Europe are thrown out of employment, who later are driven by necessity to emigrate to the United States, and who, upon arrival, apply for work at wages one-third to one-half less than our own wage-earners. That the result is disastrous to native labor is so evident that it needs only be stated to be fully appreciated, and is exactly the view the wage-earners took of the matter on the 8th day of November. —American Industries.

No Hysterics.

The Iron Age does not take the hysterical view of apprehended changes in tariff on iron. The paragraphs quoted below read almost like extracts from the pages of the Record:

Our transatlantic friends will make a serious mistake if they rely on the easy possession of any considerable portion of our markets through the coming revision of tariff duties. The American manufacturers were never before so well equipped for a successful contest, since they have for years encountered the fiercest domestic competition.

Many of our manufacturing establishments are admittedly the finest in the world, and our engineers have succeeded in obtaining a larger output per man employed than was deemed possible but a few years since. The national resources in raw material and skilled labor are beyond those of any other country in the world, and American energy, enterprise and pluck will forbid the surrender to outside competitors of any considerable part of the home market now under American control.—Philadelphia Record.

Carpet Prices Advancing.

Many large carpet manufacturers advanced prices before election. Since then several large corporations, by advancing prices, have expressed their belief that a general business depression will soon be upon us. S. Sanford & Sons have advanced their entire line 2½ cents per yard. The Lowell Company, the Roxbury Company, and Stinson Bros. have also made advances. Perhaps these manufacturers are simply getting a surplus ahead to tide them over the hard times sure to follow the introduction of free wool and other raw materials for making carpets. The days of McKinleyism are numbered. When they are gone the people will have cheaper and better carpets, and prices will not be fixed by the sweet will of our manufacturers.

Taxation Defined.

The professor of economics of the Minnesota State University thus defines it: "It is the power that takes your money, your labor, your goods, and returns what it pleases." Under despotic governments taxation at its best is a compulsory exchange and tribute to authority, which actually amounts to undisguised robbery and often confiscation. Its operations upon the industries are to crush them, since it kills both labor and capital. A government of the people, whose basic principle is equality, cannot afford a taxation which is a synonym for inequality, injustice and downright robbery."—St. Louis Courier.

HERE'S ALL THE NEWS

TO BE FOUND IN THE STATE OF INDIANA.

Giving a Detailed Account of the Numerous Crimes, Casualties, Fires, Suicides, Deaths, Etc., Etc.

Adjutant General's Report.

Adjutant General Ruckle has filed his report with the Governor. The total expenditures for his department for the fiscal year ending in 1891 was $36,850.12, and for 1892, the appropriation being $25,000 instead of $37,000, the expenditures were $24,922.08. The Government aid to Indiana for 1891 was $13,831.45, and for 1892, $13,074. Army supplies were drawn from the Government, and the cost charged against this account. Gen. Ruckle reports forty-four organizations in the State's military service. These are divided into four regiments. New companies, as yet on probation, have been organized at Auburn, Anderson, Kokomo, Washington, Evansville, Wabash, Jeffersonville, and Indianapolis. Seven companies serve their three years of enlistment, and were reorganized and mustered in. Seven companies were disbanded. The report refers to the new uniforms provided at the government's expense, and calls attention to the need of overcoats, of which the 1,800 men have only one hundred. Attention is also called to the adoption of the new tactics; necessitating a more thorough system of instruction. The infantry, it is said, is armed with guns of 45 caliber, of the breech loading Springfield pattern, purchased at intervals since 1873. They are declared not up to the standard. No new arms have been drawn, because of the expected change by the United States War Department, reducing the caliber of the guns to thirty. Gen. Ruckle declares the artillery service poorly equipped, and the field pieces as much out of date as the obsolete muzzle-loaders.

Minor State Items.

THE Crawfordsville Daily Star has suspended publication.

ELWOOD will probably have two new factories in the near future.

JACK OWEN of Kokomo, fell from a cart and was dragged to death.

A WILD deer is roaming in the woods in Delaware County, near Daleville.

JAMES W. ANDERSON, the richest man in Rush County, died in Rushville of consumption.

JERRE THOMAS, aged 45, of Muncie, was thrown from his buggy and he died from the injuries.

AT No. 4 mine, near Washington, Leonard Redmaster's life was crushed out by falling slate.

ELWOOD attorneys want another court in that city and another judicial district carved out of the county.

THE big gas fight between the two Kokomo companies has finally been declared off and a uniform scale of prices settled upon.

THE Terre Haute police confiscated the entire bundle of a Chicago sensational paper on the grounds that it was obscene literature.

OLE OLSON, a Norwegian resident of La Porte County, was run over and instantly killed by a Lake Shore engine, in the La Porte yards.

HENRY HOCK, a fireman on a P., Ft. W. & C. freight, is in a Fort Wayne hospital from serious injuries received by falling from a bridge.

AT Hobart, Lars Jensen, an employe of the Garden City Brick Company, was crushed to death by the caving in of a clay pile in the yards.

JOHN A. GARVEY, a bright young newspaper man of Fort Wayne, on the staff of the Daily News, was run over and killed by a freight train.

WHAT will undoubtedly be the largest window glass factory in the United States has been located in Alexandria. The plant will be in operation by July.

TERRE HAUTE is to have a new and commodious friendly inn, with a work room for women attached. The building will be erected by the charity societies of the cities.

PETER KAYLOR and Charles Thompson, two employes of the gas company at Fort Wayne, are in a dangerous condition, having been overcome by inhaling gas while repairing a leak.

THE Crawfordsville City Council has passed an ordinance requiring every plumber in town to give a bond of $1,000, to guarantee the faithful performance of his work in laying gas pipes.

EX-TREASURER PETER RAGLE of Martin County, who sued the county for $3,000 alleged to have been paid by him when he turned over the office to his successor, got judgment for $485.

S. T. GASTON at Columbus, has filed suit for $1,000 damages against the Western Union Telegraph Company for failure to deliver a message announcing the demise of his father in Kansas.

Valparaiso has an overcoat thief who seems to be succeeding wonderfully in his art. He has nearly cleaned out the town. His last victim was an editor, who will have to remain in bed if a cold spell comes along.

MRS. JANE BURKE of Huntington, got a verdict of $850 at Wabash against the city of Huntington for injuries received by a fall on a sidewalk in that city. The suit was for $5,000, and a change of venue taken.

CHARLES HAMMOND of Monarch, Monroe County, has begun suit at Bloomington, for $25,000 damages against George Clark and Eliza Clark, whom he charges with slandering him and sending him white-cap letters.

THE financial report of the Indiana Institute for the Blind has been filed with the Governor. It shows that of the $33,000 appropriated by the Legislature, $30,244.15 was expended. The receipts from the industrial school's shop were $2,755.85; from the greenhouse, $73.78, and from the clothing account, $316.61. Of the appropriation of $2,470 to the industrial school, $814.46 remained at the close of the year.

WHILE barn-raising on Benefiel's farm, north of Pendleton, a large timber fell, catching Albert Price, a young carpenter of Middletown, wedging him between two large sills, and crushing his breast. His injuries are internal and so serious he cannot live.

GEORGE PAULING'S son, Warren, 12 years old, jumped on a fast freight train at Wabash, and fell off under the wheels. His right leg was cut off just below the hip and it is probable that he will not live. This accident may also cause the death of Mrs. Pauling, whose health is in no condition to withstand the shock caused by this accident.

ABOUT two weeks since a burglar was killed while endeavoring to break into a store at Mew Washington, Crawford country, Ohio. Before he died he made a statement that he lived in Fort Wayne, on East Columbia street, but would not give his real name. From other actions and remarks that he made at the time it is evident that his home was in Fort Wayne, but that he had concealed his identity to protect the reputation of his family. The Fort Wayne Times asserts that the corpse belongs to a highly connected Fort Wayne family, a member of which has led a wayward life for several years, and who has been in several bad scraps, which cost his family considerable money.

IF YOU CAN READ

and write, and are possessed of fair intelligence, you are fully qualified to make a grand success of what we offer you. We have lately published at great expense and labor a perfect wonder in the way of an illustrated Gift Book, suitable to all classes, an ornament to any home, and at a price that brings it within the reach of all, even those of moderate means. Heretofore only those who indulged in luxuries have felt that they could afford a book of this class, as they are sold in book stores at $5.00 and upwards. The book which we offer is not in any way inferior to those above referred to, but is far superior to hundreds of books of this nature that are sold at prices exceeding ours by an enormous per cent. It is selling with a rush wherever shown. Agents have only to show the book and mention the price, and it sells on its merits without further talking. No better Christmas, New Year's or Birthday present can be selected. It will sell, not only for holiday trade, but at all seasons of the year, for the reason that all will want it in their homes, and will have it as soon as they know the low price at which our agents can furnish them. Reader, if you need profitable employment, and a business in which you can and will take pride, as well as make money rapidly, do not fail to send for circulars containing private terms to agents and full information which will be sent FREE upon application. Old and new agents alike are making handsome salaries—yes, fortunes. Many of those who are making the best records are new at the agency business, having had no previous experience. ☞ Make a start—the field is entirely new. No such terms have been offered agents as we now offer on this wonderful book. Special qualifications not necessary, for it sells everywhere at sight. Perhaps you have at some time been unsuccessful at the agency business. If so, there is every reason why you should try this, the PRINCE of gift books, as failure is impossible if you make A START. Write us to-day, study our circulars and directions, then order an outfit and go to work with push and energy. You may make the greatest mistake of your life, if you allow this GOLDEN opportunity to pass unimproved.

ROASTER AND BAKER

IMPROVED
ROASTER & BAKER
FOR MEATS, FOWL, FISH, ETC., AND FOR BAKING BREAD, CAKES AND PUDDINGS.
BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THE BOND OF FLESH.

Weird Tale of Life from the Tyrolese Mountains.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

CHAPTER I.

This is a story of much sorrow, and I warn those who only love what is full of cheer and brightness that it may sadden and repel them. It may indeed horrify some, for it deals with the darkness of a strange and awful destiny. But at the same time I have deemed it a story worth the telling, since it is filled, after all, with the tragedy of a great if unique human passion.

We were born in a lovely village of the Austrian Tyrol, whose name I will not here record. Our parents were people of good bourgeois standing; my father's luck and thrift were almost proverbial. For years he had desired children, and at last we came.

My mother suffered agony at our birth, and afterward, when we were shown her, it is said that the shock caused her death. For we were not as other children, but bound together by a ligature of flesh. Otherwise we were two boys formed in a perfectly normal way. My brother was, however, at all times far less healthy and vigorous than I. He was called, I may here state, Conrad, and Victor was the name given to myself.

Our birth created wild wonder, and for days people flocked to see us. My father neither forbade nor allowed us to be seen. An old relative, a kind of aunt long since dead, showed us, I believe, to the gaping crowds. As for my father, he was prostrated with grief at the death of his wife and the curse of what he held a hideous and monstrous prodigy.

But after awhile all such feeling changed with him. He became not only used to us but fond of us. The next step was easily taken, and before we were 2 years old he lavished on us the strongest paternal love.

Meanwhile we had received the best of care from dear, kindly old Hedwig, and had been nursed through an illness which threatened to end our infantile lives. My early recollections are solely those of being very happy. Conrad seemed in a manner apart from me, and yet most intimately akin. They used to say that my nature was a rather domineering one. But I was in every way the stronger and larger, so that I perhaps began at a tender age to assert my superior mental and physical traits. As little boys we were sometimes taken to walk, and I well recall how people would flock staringly about us, and how I somewhat keenly enjoyed the vague celebrity that surrounded us.

We were constantly visited by men of medical and surgical repute from various European cities and towns. Showmen and adventurers came, too, and these (or at least a number of them) offered my father large sums for the right to exhibit us as a rare physiological marvel.

My father's health began to weaken when we had reached our eighth or ninth year, and the failure of a Vienna banking house, to which he had intrusted the major portion of his savings, no doubted helped to inflict upon him a severe paralytic disorder. From this it soon became apparent that he could never quite rally; but while his partial recovery had begun to encourage Hedwig and ourselves, we were sought out by a man named Oscar Schreiner.

This man from the hour when I first laid eyes upon him, struck me as the most completely kind and gentle being whom I had yet beheld. I have never had occason (except in one most solemn and fateful instance) to alter the verdict roused by that first pleasant impression.

He was still young when he came to us, being a widower of about six-and twenty, with a little daughter, Linda, whom he had placed at a boarding-school in his native Berlin. I suppose one would not precisely have called him a gentleman, though I have always held him to be far above many who would be amazed if you denied them the title. Oscar Schreiner certainly possessed education, and combined with that a high and sure sense of honor.

He wanted to make money, and frankly told my father that this was his present ruling aim. He was wholly candid and sincere in his dealings. Would my father give us to him for a certain time, and permit him to manage our exhibition wherever he chose, receiving by terms of contract a stated and continuous percentage on all public shows in which we might be concerned?

My father, ill and needing money, consented. I never regretted his consent, though at first I rebelled against it. Perhaps I would have rebelled more than I did if Conrad had cried and protested less. But I deemed it my duty to resent contumacy of any sort on my brother's part, dearly as I loved him.

By this time my influence over him was potent in the extreme. He was devotedly fond of me, looked upon me as a guiding spirit, and faithfully followed all my counsels. I soon became aware that the influence which I exerted over him was of a strangely forceful kind. I suppose it was what would nowadays be called hypnotism. Weird as it may seem, I discovered that by the exertion of a little concentrated willpower I could throw him into a sleep and afterward awake him at pleasure—almost at pleasure, that is, though not quite, and not always. The bond of flesh extended from my right side, while it met his just over the aorta. The physicians who had examined us when little boys had nearly all agreed that any operation performed upon us in the way of cutting us apart would certainly result in Conrad's death, while it might fearfully imperil my own life, even if the worst did not result.

Oscar Shreiner might have proved a stern custodian. As it fortunately happened, he was the gentlest and kindest; we were taken by him to many different parts of Europe, but treated always with the tenderest care. I shall never forget my delight on first meeting his daughter in Berlin. By this time we had learned of our father's sudden and painless death at home. Linda's delicate sympathy softened, for myself at least, the poignance of grief. She was only a little girl, but her big, sweet blue eyes, her rosy mouth, and her air of exquisite sympathy could not pass from memory. Her father obtained permission for her to leave the boarding-school of an afternoon and chat with us in a quiet, domestic way, at the end of our loud, bustling hours in the crowded museum.

It would now have been easy enough for Oscar Schreiner to grasp all the money which our constant exhibition brought him in. Our father had died; we were, in a manner, quite his own property. But apart from showing any such avaricious spirit, this admirable man kept perpetually depositing to our credit a distinct percentage on every coin that he received. Far more than that, he employed tutors for our education, and though Conrad was a dull scholar and learned ill or wholly failed to learn what was taught him, I, with my quicker and keener mind, soon became strikingly proficient.

Knowledge, cultivation, brought me sorrow mixed with joy. It was of course agreeable to think and feel in a more refined way, but this very enlightenment induced the inevitable moods of self-disgust. I found myself beginning to loathe the bond of flesh which bound me to Conrad. With my brother it was quite different. He accepted his condition without a murmur. Gradually I began to realize it; he was more a part of me than I of him; Not merely a great affection for me swayed him at all times, but a feeling that I was in a way the source and center whence all his best energy sprang. From a physical point of view this fact was noticeable thus: If a sickness of any sort overtook me Conrad was sure to share it, while if he were ill I often remained perfectly well. Once, in our thirteenth year, he was attacked by a malady which came near ending his life. To me the tedium and anxiety were intolerable, since I was in fairly good health. And then, suddenly, one day came the terrifying thought. "What if he should die?"

But Conrad recovered, and my fears vanished. Still, a resolve was slowly taking shape within my brain. I mentioned it to no one for a very long time, but nevertheless it grew and grew like a plant in the dark.

Oscar Shreiner treated us in the most honorable manner regarding all profits which accrued to us, keeping both the letter and spirit of his contract with our dead father. As we became older our financial prospects brightened; we drew larger audiences as young men than we had drawn as boys. I wearied greatly, now, under the continuous vulgarity and monotony of our life. I knew by heart, and so did Conrad, the speech with which Oscar Shreiner was wont to present us for public inspection. Then, to lessen the ennui, I set myself the task of learning it from the bottom upward. This feat I at length achieved, to the wonder and admiration of my brother, whose mental powers it completely surpassed.

In appearance I was tall and fair, with a pleasing face and a well-built figure. I perceived that I was by no means ill-favored, and when I had reached early manhood the frequent smiles of women and maidens told me that my looks attracted them. But always a touch of compassion was blent with their admiring glances, and this troubled me more than words can express.

Conrad was a slender, shrinking lad, almost a head shorter than I, and unengaging both as to form and feature. When we had passed our twenty-first year the contrast became almost pitiably striking. His dependence upon me, his belief in me, had increased rather than lessened. Nothing could have been more pathetic than either. His spirits rose and fell in affectionate obedience to mine. If a cloud gloomed my thoughts I could trace its dusky reflection in the dull yet wistful eyes uplifted to me.

CHAPTER II.

In the year 186— we drifted again to Berlin for the fourth or fifth time. A young physician, named Olaf Aveling, a Dane who had already won some little note in the medical and surgical world and was believed anxious to win considerable more, came very often to see us, and with Schreiner's full sanction made repeated minute examinations of the peculiar link that bound us together.

I had never especially liked Aveling. He struck me as cold and unsympathetic, and I could not but comprehend that if he should ever make a proposal to perform upon us a disjunctive operation, it would be from motives of a severely selfish character.

Still, I liked his conversation, which was often brilliant and forcible. He was a handsome fellow, with a pale, keen face lit by small though shining dark eyes, and an air of command and assertion which became his shapely build.

All in all, I rather prized his visits; and though for many days he did not let fall even a single hint that he desired to operate upon our bond of flesh, he still contrived to make it clear that such was his actual aim and wish.

Shortly after our arrival in Berlin the daughter of Schreiner left a relative with whom she had been living since her graduation at the German boarding-school, and came to dwell with her father. I took this for a sign that Schreiner had finally yielded to my persuasions on a certain subject, and I rejoiced in consequence.

One day I said to our friend: "This is a pretty little home, and I hope sincerely that instead of merely passing the next few months here for purposes of rest, we may reside indefinitely under its peaceful roof."

Oscar Schreiner started, while Conrad looked up at me inquiringly with his placid, trustful eyes.

"Do you mean, brother," he asked, "that you want us never to appear in public any more?"

"Never!" I said emphatically, and fixed my gaze upon Schreiner. "Have we not gained enough?" I went on. "Conrad and I can live comfortably on our money for the rest of our days, be they many or few. As for yourself, you have acquired a snug little fortune beyond all doubt."

"Yes," said Schreiner, "I have told you every thaler."

"Of course you have," I broke in, with impetus. "That is just my reason for now speaking straight to the point. And the point, dear Oscar, is this: Let us give up 'showmanship' forever. I detest it, as you know, and Conrad isn't by any means enamored of it. Besides, now that your charming daughter has come to live with us we ought to make the happiest sort of a household: Surely Linda prefers to remain with you. But that will be impossible if you again travel."

Schreiner looked at me with a smile that slowly deepened, and then drew near to me, taking my hand in his. "It shall be as you say, Victor," he replied. "After all I believe you are right. But how will you and Conrad pass your time? I fear that after a certain term of leisure you will both long for the old life again."

"Oh," I said, laughing, "I will talk with Linda for an hour or two every day. That will never tire me."

These words were gayly thrown at Linda Schreiner, who had just then entered the room. But immediately her father echoed my laugh, saying, lightly:

"Oh, you must be careful how you talk too much in that strain! Olaf Aveling might overhear you and grow jealous."

This was the dawn of my discovery that Dr. Aveling cared in the least for the daughter of our dear friend.

Linda tossed her curly blonde head and gave a contemptuous smile, not wholly unmixed with a blush. Then, in the kindliest way, she looked at me and said:

"We don't care a straw, do we, Victor, whether he's jealous or no?"

"Not a straw," I returned, though the affected gaiety with which I spoke cost me inward pain.

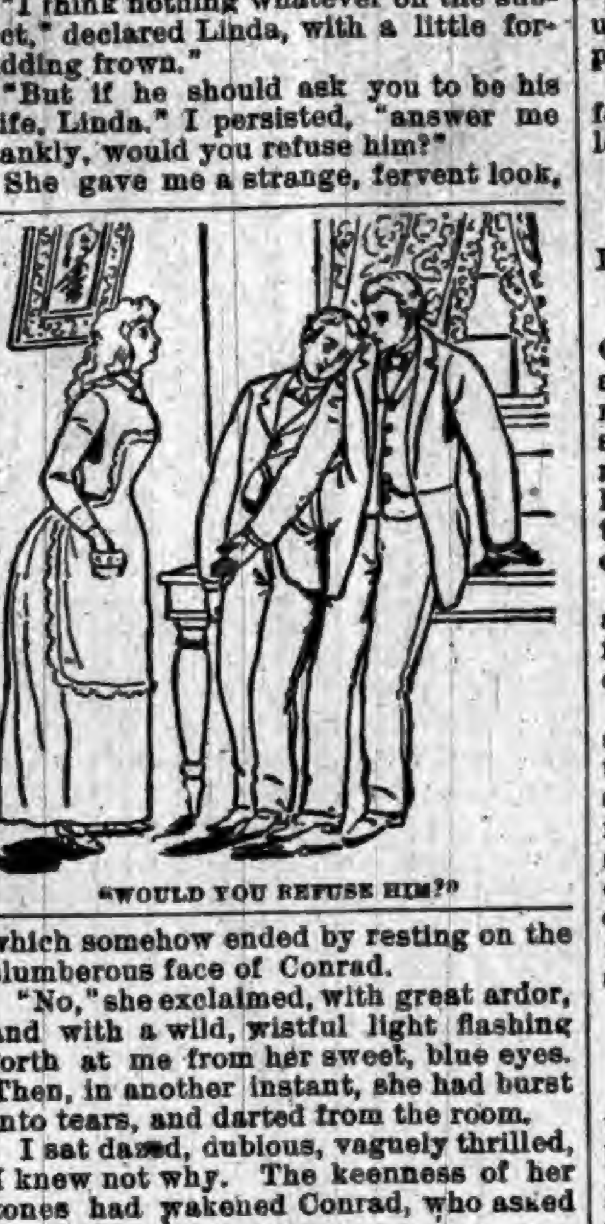
Linda had become a very beautiful girl now, and it is not in the least strange that a man of Aveling's comparative youth should have been fascinated by her radiant face, aureoled in bounteous hair of silky gold. When she and I next held one of our private talks together (which means when Conrad's head had sleepily drooped itself upon my shoulder) I somewhat boldly questioned her.

"Tell, me," I said, "do you think that Olaf Aveling really wishes to marry you?"

"I think nothing whatever on the subject," declared Linda, with a little forbidding frown.

"But if he should ask you to be his wife, Linda," I persisted, "answer me frankly, would you refuse him?"

She gave me a strange, fervent look, which somehow ended by resting on the slumberous face of Conrad.



"WOULD YOU REFUSE HIM?"

"No," she exclaimed, with great ardor, and with a wild, wistful light flashing forth at me from her sweet, blue eyes. Then, in another instant, she had burst into tears, and darted from the room.

I sat dazed, dubious, vaguely thrilled, I knew not why. The keenness of her tones had wakened Conrad, who asked of me:

"Victor, what is it? Was Linda angry at you, hurrying off like that?"

"Oh, no," I answered, though absently, with the tips of my lips, as it were.

He seemed satisfied with the answer and let his head sink again on my shoulder. I slowly turned and regarded him, he being unconscious that I did so. And then a terrible thing happened. Momentarily and yet with intense acuteness there came across me a shuddering detestation of this frail creature whose life was so indissolubly linked to mine. The impulse that seized me was, I suppose, a murderous one. If it had lasted, if some wave of ethical and fraternal potency had not soon swept it aside, God knows what might have happened!

As it was, the re-humanizing change took place, and I presently found myself still seated at my brother's side, with an altered and remorseful spirit and with cold beads of sweat clustering on cheeks and brow.

Still, the hour sent, so to speak, its lasting reverberations through my life. I did not cease to regard Conrad both, with tenderness and pity; but the love which I now knew that I felt for Linda Schreiner controlled me with novel stress. I must here admit that it left behind it a certain strange residuum of cruelty toward Conrad.

And yet, was I so wholly blamable? If the severance was effected between him and me, my own peril would be immense. I had become sure that my chances of survival, in such a case, would be about one in ten. Yet this love for Linda, mixed with a joyous glimmering of faith in her possible love for me, set my heart throbbing with a sort of divine courage.

"Divine?" many will ask. "And why?" they will further urge, "since it was essentially selfish?" I grant that selfishness had much to do with it, and yet what love except the loftier altruistic love is unconcerned with egoism? A passion like mine is not, nor ever was. And swiftly, even horribly, as I may add, my love for this charming girl had blossomed into a passion.

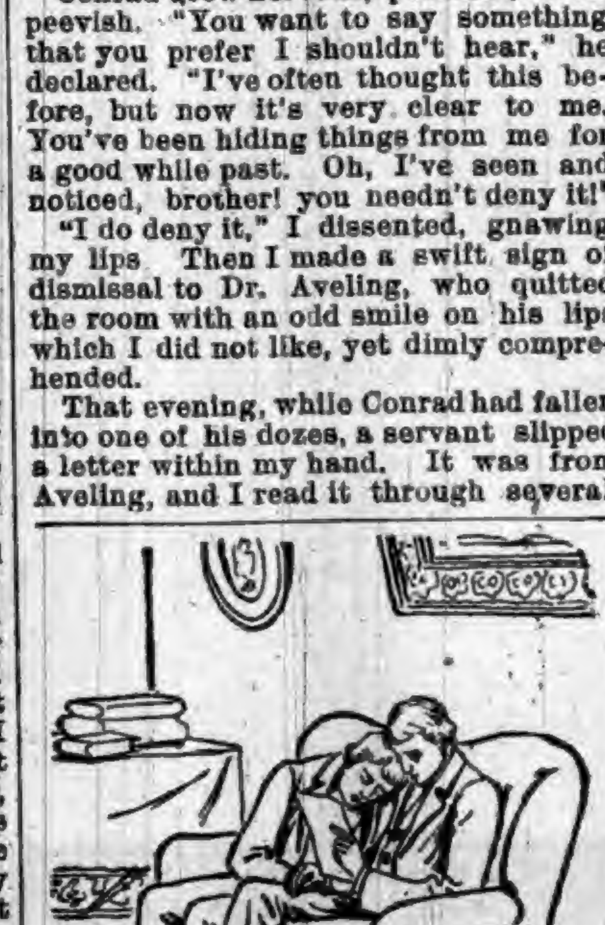
Almost whenever Linda and I held conferences after this I used my power over Conrad—hypnotic, mesmeric, whatever one pleases to call it. Not a word of confession ever left my lips. But by suggestion, by innuendo, I am certain that I must have spoken. Whether she understood me or no, I cannot tell. It seems to me now that she understood perfectly. All this time I was possessed by a prophetic sensation that sooner or later my repressed fervor of sentiment must break bounds in terms of transport and avowal.

Olaf Aveling held several conversations with me after this, and at last I could no longer endure the knowledge of his evident yet concealed purpose. One day I exerted my influence over Conrad, while the young physician was present, yet it wholly failed, as now and then it had previously failed.

Conrad grew nervous, petulant, even peevish. "You want to say something that you prefer I shouldn't hear," he declared. "I've often thought this before, but now it's very clear to me. You've been hiding things from me for a good while past. Oh, I've seen and noticed, brother! you needn't deny it!"

"I do deny it," I dissented, gnawing my lips. Then I made a swift sign of dismissal to Dr. Aveling, who quitted the room with an odd smile on his lips which I did not like, yet dimly comprehended.

That evening, while Conrad had fallen into one of his dozes, a servant slipped a letter within my hand. It was from Aveling, and I read it through several times without Conrad dreaming that I did so.



IT WAS FROM AVELING.

It was a proposal to undertake the operation of our disjunction, and it gave me pangs of mingled delight and hope.

"My last examination," ran one passage of the letter, "has convinced me that both you and your brother stand an excellent chance of recovery. Whatever other surgeons may have told you, rest sure that I am right. That the operation will be highly perilous I do not deny. But that any scruples of sacrificing Conrad should restrain you is on your part unwise to a foolish degree. You, the superior mind and intelligence—you, as I am so firmly convinced, craving and hungering after your liberty, should by no means recoil from trying to attain it because fearful of sacrificing your brother. On my word of honor as a scientific man, Conrad will run no greater risk than yourself. He need know nothing of the coming trial. Ether would, naturally, be administered to you both. He could receive it while asleep, as a matter of course. I should choose the night, after you have retired. Schreiner had best be told, beyond doubt, but Linda, poor little sympathetic soul, should not be shocked by any previous tidings of the truth. Think this communication carefully over and answer me at your future convenience."

Soon afterward I found an occasion to give Oscar Schreiner the letter from Aveling.

"Read," I enjoined, "and decide for us." I was fearfully agitated, and he perceived that I was.

"I—I know something of this," he faltered, after having glanced at the letter.

"Aveling has told you?" I whispered.

"Yes."

"But you've not breathed a word to Linda?"

"No, and I shall not."

He left me, and during another hour Conrad and I retired to bed. I passed a most anxious and troubled night, and my distress reacted upon my brother, or so it seemed. He grew feverish at midnight, and as wakeful as myself. A horrible fear beset me, toward dawn, that he might perhaps be on the verge of some serious seizure.

All the next day he was so restless and vigilant that I had the greatest difficulty in obtaining from Schreiner his opinions and views.

But at length I did obtain them. I see now that he was immensely under the influence of Aveling's private persuasions. But these were not his sole motive for desiring that the operation should take place. He had observed only too well my eager longing for freedom, though its chief cause I am but too sure that he did not then even remotely suspect.

Making Steel.

An uninformed person, watching the production of steel by the open-hearth method, sometimes thinks the process a very rough, hap-hazard operation. This is totally at variance with the facts of the case, since the manufacture of a uniform grade of steel even from a uniform grade of raw materials is a delicate operation. A few years ago it was thought that the perfected chemical processes and methods of analysis would surely result in even grades of product, but unfortunately this expectation has proved a castle in Spain, and manufacturers realize that the temperature at which different stages of the operation are carried on is of as much importance as the chemical composition. It is now acknowledged by many of the leading producers that a comparatively small error in estimating the temperature at which the molten steel is run from the furnace may have a disastrous effect on the quality of the metal. Hitherto the eye of the workman has been the sole reliance in estimating this temperature, and the skill of some of these men is really remarkable. Now, however, an instrument called a pyrometer is being introduced for the purpose of indicating the temperature with greater accuracy. Sir Lowthian Bell, the well-known English metallurgist, recently stated that preliminary trials of the instrument in the great steel works of which he was manager, had proved entirely satisfactory, and preparations for employing it in the course of regular work had been made. The instrument is already well known to engineers, but has generally been employed in special tests, where high temperatures were to be measured at intervals during a few hours or days only, such as the examination of fire-proof arches, by Prof. Johnson at St. Louis a few months ago.

Presentiments.

Mozart's sad notion that the requiem he had undertaken to write for his mysterious customer would be his own death-chant, proved as prophetic as Hogarth's serious assent to the jocular suggestion when "The End of All Things" was completed there would be an end to the painter.

Fechter's intuition was not at fault when it made him urge the sculptor taking his instructions respecting his last resting-place, to set to work at once, as there was no time to lose; when the tomb was ready for the tenant the tenant was ready for the tomb.

Tom Sheridan, bidding Angelo good-by with the remark, "I have twenty months to live," gauged the term of his existence to a nicety.

Awakened from a sick man's slumber by the baying of hounds and the uproar attending the pulling down of a stag in a neighbor's garden, sport-hating Millet exclaimed, "It is an omen!" and in a few days took leave of pencil and paper forever.

Not long before his fatal illness, Prince Albert said to the Queen:

"I do not cling to life. You do, but I set no store by it. If I knew that those I loved were well cared for, I should be quite ready to die tomorrow. I am sure if I had a severe illness I should give up at once. I should not struggle for life."

The Irish Harp.

The old-style Irish harp was about four feet high, had no pedals, and was strung to the back with straps. The one belonging to King Brian Boru, who was killed at the battle of Clontarf in 1014, is still preserved in the museum at Trinity College, Dublin. It is black with age, and polished, but worm-eaten. The old relic is adorned with silver ornaments. The King's son, Teague, took the harp to Rome after the battle, and presented it to the Pope, together with the crown and regalia that had been worn by his father. A succeeding Pope gave it to Henry VIII. together with the title of "Defender of the Faith," and Henry gave it to the Earl of Clanricarde, in whose family it was held until the beginning of the eighteenth century. It then passed through several hands, until 1786, when the college became its owner.

Who Are the White Jews?

In Cochin, a town on the coast of Travancore, a state in the southwest of India, these is a small body of Jews who are called White Jews, because their skin is fair and their hair light. They were once very numerous along this coast, but in Cochin, where they have a quarter all to themselves, there are now only some two hundred of them. They have dwelt here for hundreds of years as a distinct race, and claim to be descendants of the Jews who fled from Jerusalem after its destruction by the Romans, A. D. 70.

JAY GOULD IS DEAD.

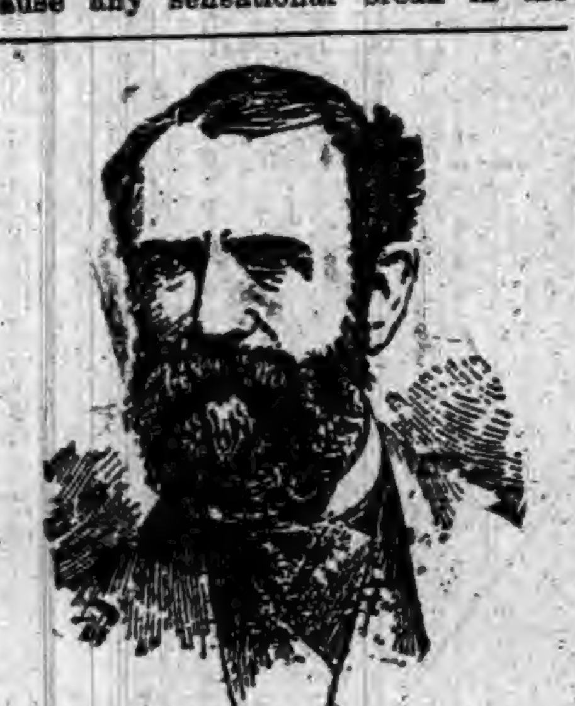
PASSES OUT OF LIFE PAINLESSLY AND PEACEFULLY.

His Family All About Him—The Wizard of Wall Street Ends His Remarkable Career—Estimates of His Wealth—Sketch of the Wonderful Man.

Gould Is Gone.

Jay Gould, the greatest financier the United States has ever known, died at his Fifth avenue residence in New York at 9:12 o'clock Friday morning. His end was peaceful. The troubles from which he died were diagnosed as consumption of the stomach, supplemented with a bilious attack. Twelve hours before his death he was prostrated by a nervous attack, and his physician, Dr. Munn, was summoned. Every member of the Gould family was also summoned and they watched at his bedside until the end came.

The death of the great financier inspired unusual regret, but it did not cause any sensational break in the stock market, in which, for twenty years, he was the most important figure. The market was not even shaken.



JAY GOULD.

It was not believed until 2 o'clock in the morning that Mr. Gould was going to die. He had been prostrated several times within the past three years. The attack was thought to be like the others, merely temporary.

Sketch of the Wizard's Career.

Jay Gould was a native of Roxbury, N. Y., where he was born on the 27th of May, 1836. His early life was spent on a farm. He entered Hobart College when 14 years of age, paying for his tuition with money earned by keeping the books of the village blacksmith during the evenings. He developed a taste for surveying and one of his earliest enterprises was the publication of a county map of his own drawing. The accuracy of the work attracted attention and he was employed by the Legislature to make a topographical survey of the State. For several years he was engaged in this work and in making surveys of several counties in Ohio and Michigan.

In 1856 he became associated with Zadock Pratt in the management of a tannery and conducting a large lumbering business. He soon purchased his partner's interest, and sold his plant just in time to avoid the panic of 1857. He invested his money in a bank at Stroudsburg, Pa., purchased bonds of a Vermont railroad at their lowest price, 10 cents on the dollar, and realized fourfold from the increase in value within a year. He removed to New York City in 1859, where he became a broker, and invested largely in the stock of the Erie Road. He soon became President of that company and remained in the directory till 1872, he and James Fisk being the controlling spirits of the corporation.

He invested largely in the stock of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, and a favorable opportunity occurring he obtained a controlling interest. A depression in the stock of the Western Union taking place, he was enabled to grasp control of that corporation also, and he consolidated the two, not only increasing the value of the Atlantic and Pacific properties by a favorable alliance but also benefiting the Western Union by destroying competition. The American Union and the Mutual Union companies, both organized as competitors of the Western Union, were subsequently absorbed by methods known best to the stock manipulators of Wall street, and the monopoly of the telegraph business was assured to the Western Union. In 1887 he purchased a controlling interest in the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad and obtained a joint interest with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad in the Atlantic and Pacific and the western portion of the Southern Pacific Road.

He was either bull or bear, as best suited his purpose to pluck the unwary fool who dared attempt to trade in his favorites, and hundreds of fortunes of the too venturesome passed into his coffers. Like a giant octopus he guarded his properties and his tentacles grasped and destroyed all within reach. Compassion was an unknown quality in his breast. Friend and foe alike contributed to the gratification of his rapacity.

Mr. Gould's methods were constantly changing. He was exceedingly secretive and the brokers nearest to him, who at times fancied they were fully in his confidence, were often surprised by orders to sell when they thought it best to buy or to buy when they thought it expedient to sell. His operations were a constant series of surprises. Their object was always the same. His first money was made by the sale of a rat-trap which he had invented. He seemed in after life to keep a trap constantly at hand for the purpose of catching the Wall street rats who swarmed about him.

Mr. Gould was free from the vices that commonly attach to men of the world. He seldom indulged in wine, never used tobacco, and had no liking for gay or dissolute society. He was devotedly attached to his family, and the death of his wife several years ago was a severe blow to him. Since that event his daughter Helen was mistress of his household, and the two were almost inseparable. Miss Helen accompanied him on his tours over the country, sacrificing her opportunities of shining in society that she might minister to his happiness. His son George was his business confidant. He inherited much of the shrewdness of his father, and in recent years has been the active manager of some of the most important of the Gould properties. He married Edith Kingdon, the well-known actress, and they are living happily together.

No accurate estimate can be made of Mr. Gould's wealth. Two hundred and fifty million dollars is generally regarded as approximating the value of his possessions. He was not given to ostentatious charities, and considering his wealth he was niggardly, although he has donated large sums to deserving objects on rare occasions.

Improved Fire Department.

The fire department is in better shape now than ever before, for quick work. The recent addition to the buildings gives a large room in which are kept standing both the engine and the hook and ladder trucks. The barn has been moved up to the rear end of this room, and the horses are standing with their heads to the engine. When the bell is tapped, a pull at a rope opens the doors at the horses' heads, and as the door swings out, the strap that held the horses, is loosened, allowing them to run out—one on each side of the engine. The harness is thrown on, they are hitched up, the big door in front opens, and off they go in fine city style. We were shown some of these arrangements the other day, by Mr. Click, but we are told that Marshal Pfefferl should be credited with planning most of these improvements, and he takes great pride in training the big horses so they know as well what to do as anyone. And in our words of praise we should not forget the town council, whose public spirit has made these improvements possible. Few cities are better managed than Auburn.

He Fined the Preacher.

Uncle Robert Culbertson used to be a justice of the peace, in Concord township, from 1855 to 1863, and dealt out justice among the pioneers with an impartial hand. John F. Coburn, of the same township, well known to all the early settlers, was a minister of the Gospel, and a man generally respected, and it was seldom indeed, that the old Adam got the better of his usually serene temper. But all men are mortal, and have their weak moments. One year Mr. Coburn had a man working his sorghum mill, and when the season was over he was going to take the mill away as his own. To this Mr. Coburn objected, and a racket began, at the close of which it was found that the minister had thrashed his opponent. A warrant was sworn out, and Coburn was brought before his honor, Squire Culbertson, to the squire's great surprise, for he had looked on the preacher as the last man to be brought up on such a charge. However he started up the machinery in the mill of justice, and gave the minister a chance to defend himself. Mr. Coburn however, made no attempt to defend, but promptly pleaded guilty. His neighbor, the justice, assessed him a fine of $1, he and the constable threw off the costs, and the minister went home rejoicing. Mr. Culbertson thinks he is the only justice in this section, who can say he has fined a minister for threshing a man.

Stabbing Affray.

A most unfortunate stabbing affray occured near Sedan last Wednesday. Martin Wetzel, a well known farmer, a German, had some difficulty with a neighbor, Martin Treesh, who had been working some of his land. They had had some trouble about some notes Wetzel had to pay for Treesh, and at this time Treesh went to get his share of some corn, and they had another quarrel Each claims the other began the fuss, and struck first. Treesh got the old man down, and Wetzel, who had got out his pocket knife, struck Treesh in the back, cutting, what was at first supposed to be a fatal wound. He cut him again on the side of the neck. Martin Marsh, of Auburn, who happened to be there, separated them. Wetzel was arrested and put under bonds. Treesh is getting along well, as the cuts were not as bad as at first feared.

New Stock Company.

Auburn gets a new joint stock manufacturing company, to add to its already valuable interests of that kind. Monday evening a meeting was held in the treasurer's office, and an organization effected. The purpose is the manufacture of the Hunt Roaster and Baker. The stockholders are H. N. Coffinberry, W. P. Hurter, F. A. Borst, F. E. Eckhart, R. Sawvel, S. M. Nickey, S D. Hanna and W. B. Campbell. The directors are W. P. Harter, F. A. Borst, F. E. Eckhart, Reuben Sawvel and W. B. Campbell. Mr. Sawvel is president and Mr. Campbell secretary and treasurer. Steps will be taken at once, to secure the special machinery used, and business will begin. The men who are taking hold of the new company are just the ones to make it a success.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY...... DECEMBER 8, 1892.

Clevland's plurality in Indiana is 7,125.

Arizona and New Mexico will soon be admitted as states.

Harrison's plurality in Ohio is 1,072 and no one on the ticket gets 2,000.

Harrison got 22,000 plurality in Minnesota. He gets 3 electors in Oregon and Weaver 1.

We have just sent our first cargo of American oranges to England. That is the kind of free trade we want.

The full official returns give Cleveland a plurality in Illinois of 26,993, and Altgeld democrat, for governor, 22,838.

The first democratic elector in this state got 2,018 more votes than the average, and the first republican got 1,697 more.

Cleveland's plurality in Illinois is 27,003 according to the official count. His plurality in Indiana is 7,085, on highest electoral vote.

The presidential electors of the state meet at Indianapolis on the second Monday in January, as the law now stands made by congress in 1887.

Indiana's state militia numbers 25,582 men, exclusive of new companies not yet fully in the service. The total cost to the state for the year 1892, is about $27,000.

Jay Gould, died Friday morning after an illness of some months. He had taken a severe cold a few years ago, and consumption set in. His wealth was said to be 100 millions.

California went democratic, after all Cleveland's plurality is 271, which gives him their electors. The city of San Francisco, completed its official count last Thursday, and showed a plurality for Cleveland of 6,693 The state outside of the city gave Harrison a plurality of 6,422 leaving Cleveland a net plurality of 271 in the entire state.

Republican papers are wrathy, and fall to calling democrats hard names, such as "copperheads" and "infernal rebels," as we find in the Winchester Herald. As we have often said, sensible people of all parties care nothing for such drivel. It was this weakness of their editors, that did much to disgust republican voters and cause them either to stay at home or vote another ticket.

Judge McClellan's speech, on the Income Tax, which we commence to publish in this week's issue, will be read with unusual interest just now. He introduced this bill in the Fifty-first congress, and this speech, made in the Fifty-second, has received additional interest, by conditions that have arisen since it was made, as well as others arising since his bill was first introduced. Some of this speech, like the clause that begins, "In case of trouble in their great works," seems now almost prophetic, in view of the appalling riot at the great Carnegie works, last July, about four months after the speech was delivered. The entire speech is so long we shall publish it by installments, for it is so connected that it will be difficult to omit any part. We hope it will all be read and studied, especially the concluding part, which surely contains some astonishing facts.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

THE REMARKABLE CURES

Of a noted Cincinnati Physician, formerly Professor in Medical College. Will give special attention to difficult cases that other physicians have failed to cure. Both Male and Female.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnoses and wonderful cures border on that of a miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It costs nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free. A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided. The merchant mingles with the artisan in seeking relief at his hands and hundreds are cured every year.

A New Firm.

Ralph Thomas, of the firm of Thomas Bros., will open up a bakery in the new King building on south Main street, as soon as it is completed. Mr. Thomas is an enterprising young man, and genuinely a citizen of Auburn. He is a baker of ability, as the success of his efforts in the past have fully proven, and we are glad to note that he is disposed to place himself in a position where he can associate his particular accomplishments with the public demands. It is true that this enterprise will open a new avenue of competition, but if there be any reliance to be placed in the old adage, that "Competition is the life of trade," this will only serve as an incentive to greater exertions, and a more careful study on the part of competitors to acquaint themselves with the requirements of a liberally patronizing people. We wish him and his estimable wife the greatest success, that this business venture can secure for them.

David Neff, the grocer south of the jail, has conceived the new and novel idea of naming his store after his native state, New Jersey. This is rather novelistic in its nature, but nevertheless a very appropriate distinction of himself and business from all others of a like kind in town. He comes to the front with a beautiful double column ad this week. Be sure to read it.

Carson Hadsell, a former teacher of this county, but for many years a resident of Nebraska called up to renew old acquaintance on Tuesday. His brother-in-law, Dr. Sheffer of St. Joe, was with him.

We cheerfully correct a mistake into which we were led by false reports. We had stated, that Gilbert, late candidate on the republican ticket for circuit prosecutor, had been put on the prohibition ticket in Steuben county. And in this we had criticised the prohibitionists, because Gilbert had been all the time working the saloon element as a saloon candidate, if one may use such a term. It now appears we were mistaken. We have been shown a sample Steuben county ticket, and there is no name on it for prosecutor, on the prohibition ticket. It also appears that the prohibitionists met, and decided they would have nothing to do with Gilbert, as they knew him too well for that. We gladly make this statement, because we hate to see any party run their campaign on a false basis.

MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

The President's Review of National Affairs.

HINTS TO LAWMAKERS.

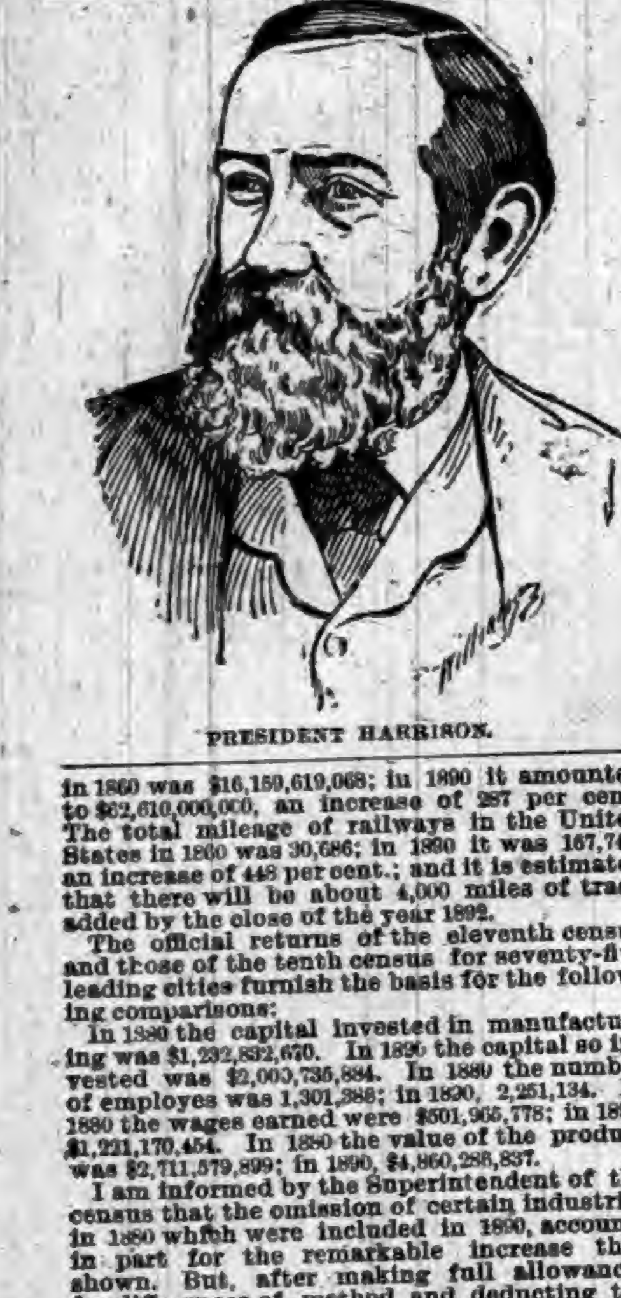
CONCERNING THE SUBJECT OF TARIFF REVISION.

Touches Lightly on Election Results—Work of the Various Departments Recited—Settlement of the Chilian and Italian Controversies and Progress of Behring Sea Arbitration Described—The Interoceanic Canal Situation, Etc., Etc.

The Country is Prosperous.

President Harrison's last message was not completed in time to be delivered at the opening of Congress, but the document was read before that body at the beginning of the second day's session.

In submitting my annual message to Congress, the message reads, I have great satisfaction in being able to say that the general conditions affecting the commercial and industrial interests of the United States are in the highest degree favorable. A comparison of the existing conditions with those of the most favored period in the history of the country will, I believe, show that so high a degree of prosperity and so general a diffusion of the comforts of life were never before enjoyed by our people. The total wealth of the country in 1860 was $16,159,619,068; in 1890 it amounted to $62,610,000,000, an increase of 287 per cent. The total mileage of railways in the United States in 1860 was 30,626; in 1890 it was 167,741, an increase of 448 per cent.; and it is estimated that there will be about 4,000 miles of track added by the close of the year 1892.



PRESIDENT HARRISON.

The official returns of the eleventh census and those of the tenth census for seventy-five leading cities furnish the basis for the following comparisons:

In 1880 the capital invested in manufacturing was $1,232,832,670. In 1890 the capital so invested was $2,900,735,884. In 1880 the number of employes was 1,301,388; in 1890, 2,251,134. In 1880 the wages earned were $501,965,778; in 1890, $1,221,170,454. In 1880 the value of the product was $2,711,579,899; in 1890, $4,860,286,837.

I am informed by the Superintendent of the census that the omission of certain industries in 1880 which were included in 1890, accounts in part for the remarkable increase thus shown. But, after making full allowances for differences of method and deducting the returns for all industries not included in the census of 1880, there remain in the reports from the seventy-five cities, an increase in the capital employed of $1,522,745,604; in the value of the product of $2,024,236,166; in wages earned of $677,943,929, and in the number of wage earners employed of 856,029. The wage earnings not only show an increased aggregate, but an increase per capita from $386 in 1880 to $547 in 1890, 41.71 per cent.

The new industrial plants established since Oct. 6, 1890, and up to Oct. 22, 1892, as partially reported in the American Economist, number 345, and the extension of existing plants, 108; the new capital invested amounts to $40,449,050, and the number of additional employes to 37,285.

The Textile World for July, 1892, states that during the first six months of the present calendar 135 new factories were built, of which forty are cotton mills, forty-eight knitting mills, twenty-six woolen mills, fifteen silk mills, four plush mills, and two linen mills. Of the forty cotton mills twenty-one have been built in the Southern States. A. B. Shepperson, of the New York Cotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindles in the United States on Sept. 1, 1892, at 15,200,000, an increase of 660,000 over the year of 1891. The consumption of cotton by American mills in 1891 was 2,396,000 bales, and in 1892, 2,584,000 bales, an increase of 188,000 bales. From the year 1860 to 1892 inclusive, there has been an increase in the consumption of cotton in Europe of 92 per cent., while during the same period the increased consumption in the United States has been about 150 per cent.

Tin Plate Manufactures.

The report of Ira Ayer, Special Agent of the Treasury Department, shows that at the date of Sept. 30, 1892, there were thirty-two companies manufacturing tin and terne plate in the United States and fourteen companies building new works for such manufacture. The estimated investment in buildings and plants at the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1893, if existing conditions were to be continued, was $5,000,000, and the estimated rate of production 200,000,000 pounds per annum. The actual production for the quarter ending Sept. 30, 1892, was 10,952,725 pounds.

During the last six months of the year 1891 and the first six months of the year 1892 the total production of pig iron was 9,710,819 tons, as against 9,209,703 tons in the year 1890, which was the largest annual production ever attained. For the same twelve months of 1891-'92 the production of Bessemer ingots was 3,878,571 tons, an increase of 189,710 gross tons over the previously unprecedented yearly production of 3,688,871 gross tons in 1890. The production of Bessemer steel rails for the first six months of 1892 was 772,436 gross tons, as against 702,080 gross tons during the last six months of the year 1891.

The total value of our foreign trade (exports and manufactures) during the last fiscal year was $1,857,680,610, an increase of $128,283,604 over the previous fiscal year. The average annual value of our imports and exports of merchandise for the ten fiscal years prior to 1891 was $1,457,322,019. It will be observed that our foreign trade for 1892 exceeded this annual average value by $400,358,591, an increase of 27.47 per cent. The significance and value of this increase are shown by the fact that the excess in the trade of 1892 over 1891 was wholly in the value of exports, for there was a decrease in the value of imports of $17,513,754.

The value of our exports during the fiscal year 1892 reached the highest figure in the history of the government, amounting to $1,030,278,148, exceeding by $145,797,338 the exports of 1891, and exceeding the value of the imports by $202,875,686. A comparison of the value of our exports for 1892 with the annual average for the ten years prior to 1891 shows an excess of $265,142,651, or of 34.65 per cent. The value of our imports of merchandise for 1892, which was $829,402,462, also exceeded the annual average value of the ten years prior to 1891 by $135,215,940. During the fiscal year 1892, the value of imports free of duty amounted to $457,999,658, the largest aggregate in the history of our commerce. The value of the imports of merchandise entered free of duty in 1892 was 55.35 per cent. of the total value of imports, as compared with 43.35 per cent. in 1891, and 33.66 per cent. in 1890.

A Prosperous Nation.

Another indication of the general prosperity of the country is found in the fact that the number of depositors in savings banks increased from 693,870 in 1860 to 4,258,893 in 1890, an increase of 513 per cent., and the amount of deposits from $149,277,504 in 1860 to $1,524,844,506 in 1890, an increase of 921 per cent. In 1891 the amount of deposits in savings banks was $1,623,079,749. It is estimated that 90 per cent. of these deposits represent the savings of wage-earners. The bank clearances for nine months ending Sept. 30, 1891, amounted to $41,049,390,808. For the same month in 1892, they amounted to $45,189,601,947, an excess for the nine months of $4,140,211,139.

There never has been a time in our history when work was so abundant or when wages were so high, whether measured by the currency in which they are paid or by their power to supply the necessaries and comforts of life. It is true that the market prices of cotton and wheat have been low. It is one of the unfavorable incidents of agriculture that the farmer cannot produce upon order. He must sow and reap in ignorance of the aggregate production of the year, and is peculiarly subject to the depreciation which follows over-production. But, while the fact I have stated is true, as to the crops mentioned, the general average of prices has been such as to give to agriculture a fair participation in the general prosperity. The value of our total farm products has increased from $1,363,646,866 in 1860 to $4,500,000,000 in 1891, as estimated by statisticians, an increase of 230 per cent. The number of hogs January 1, 1891, was 50,625,106, and their value $210,193,925; on January 1, 1892, the number was 52,398,019, and the value $241,031,415. On January 1, 1891, the number of cattle was 36,875,648, and the value $544,127,908; on January 1, 1892, the number was 37,651,239, and the value $570,749,155.

I believe that the protective system, which now for something like thirty years has prevailed in our legislation, has been a mighty instrument for the development of our national wealth and a most powerful agency in protecting the homes of our workingmen from the invasion of want. I have felt a most solicitous interest to preserve to our working people rates of wages that would not only give daily bread but supply a comfortable margin for those home attractions and family comforts and enjoyment without which life is neither hopeful nor sweet. They are American citizens—a part of the great people for whom our constitution and government were framed and instituted—and it cannot be a perversion of that constitution to so legislate as to preserve in their homes the comfort, independence, loyalty, and sense of interest in the government which are essential to good citizenship in peace, and which will bring this stalwart throng, as in 1861, to the defense of the flag when it is assailed.

Results of the Election.

It is not my purpose to renew here the argument in favor of a protective tariff. The result of the recent election must be accepted as having introduced a new policy. We must assume that the present tariff, constructed upon the lines of protection, is to be repealed, and that there is to be substituted for it a tariff law constructed solely with reference to revenue; that the duty is to be higher not because the increase will keep open an American mill, or keep up the wages of an American workman, but that in every case such a rate of duty is to be imposed as will bring to the Treasury of the United States the largest returns of revenue. The contention has not been between schedules, but between principles, and it would be offensive to suggest that the prevailing party will not carry into effect the pledges given to the people. The tariff bills passed by the House of Representatives at its last session were, as I supposed, even in the opinion of their promoters, inadequate, and justified only by the fact that the Senate and House of Representatives were not in accord, and that a general revision could not, therefore, be undertaken.

I recommend that the whole subject of tariff revision be left to the in-coming Congress. It is a matter of regret that this work must be delayed for at least three months; for the threat of great tariff changes introduces so much uncertainty that an amount, not easily estimated, of business inaction and of diminished production will necessarily result. It is possible, also, that this uncertainty may result in decreased revenues from customs duties, for our merchants will make cautious orders for foreign goods in view of the prospect of tariff reduction and the uncertainty as to when they will take effect. Those who have advocated a protective tariff can well afford to have their disastrous forcasts of a change of policy disappointed. If a system of customs duties can be framed that will set the idle wheels and looms of Europe in motion and crowd our warehouses with foreign made goods, and at the same time keep our own mills busy; that will give us an increased participation in the "markets of the world" of greater value than the home market we surrender; that will give increased work to foreign workmen upon products to be consumed by our people without diminishing the amount of work to be done here; that will enable the American manufacturer to pay to his workmen from 50 to a 100 per cent. more in wages than is paid in the foreign mill and yet to compete in our market and in foreign markets with the foreign producers; that will further reduce the cost of articles of wear and food without reducing the wages of those who produce them; that can be celebrated, after its effects have been realized, as its expectation has been, in European as well as in American cities, the authors and promoters will be entitled to the highest praise. We have had in our history several experiences of the contrasted effect of a revenue and of a protective tariff, but this generation has not felt them, and the experience is not highly instructive to the next. The friends of the protective system with undiminished confidence in the principles they have advocated, will await the results of the new experiment.

Effects of Labor Strikes.

The strained and too often disturbed relations existing between the employers and the employes in our great manufacturing establishments have not been favorable to a calm consideration by the wage earner of the effect upon wages of the protective system. The facts that his wages were the highest paid in like callings in the world, and that a maintenance of this rate of wages, in the absence of protective duties upon the product of his labor, was impossible, were obscured by the passion evoked by these contests. He may now be able to review the question in the light of his personal experience under the operation of a tariff for revenue only. If that experience shall demonstrate that the present rate of wages are thereby maintained or increased, either absolutely so or in their purchasing power, and that the aggregate volume of work to be done in this country is increased, or even maintained, so that there are more or as many days' work in a year at good or better wages for the American workmen as has been the case under the protective system, every one will rejoice.

A general process of wage reduction cannot be contemplated by any patriotic citizen without the greatest apprehension. It may be—indeed, I believe, is—possible for the American manufacturer to compete successfully with his foreign rival in many branches of production without the defense of protective duties, if the pay-rolls are equalized; but the conflict that stands between the producer and that result and the distress of our working people when it is attained are not pleasant to contemplate.

Resume of Department Reports.

The reports of the heads of the several executive departments which are herewith submitted have very naturally included a resume of the whole work of the administration with the transactions of the last fiscal year. The attention not only of Congress but of the country is again invited to the methods of administration which have been pursued and to the results which have been attained. Public revenues amounting to $1,414,079,292.28 have been collected and disbursed without loss from misappropriation, without a single defalcation of such importance as to attract the public attention, and at a diminished per cent. of cost for collection. The public business has been transacted not only with fidelity but progressively, and with a view to giving to the people in the fullest possible degree the benefits of a service established and maintained for their protection and comfort.

Our relations with other nations are now undisturbed by any serious controversy. The complicated and threatening differences with Germany and England relating to Samoan affairs, with England in relation to the seal fisheries in the Behring sea, and with Chili, growing out of the Baltimore affair, have been adjusted.

There have been negotiated and concluded, under section 3 of the tariff law, commercial agreements relating to reciprocal trade with the following countries: Brazil, Dominican Republic, Spain (for Cuba and Puerto Rico), Guatemala, Salvador, the German empire, Great Britain (for certain West Indian colonies and British Guiana), Nicaragua, Honduras, and Austro-Hungary.

Of these those with Guatemala, Salvador, the German Empire, Great Britain, Nicaragua, Honduras, and Austria-Hungary have been concluded since my last annual message. Under these trade arrangements, a free favored admission has been secured in every case for an important list of American products. Especial care has been taken to secure markets for farm products, in order to relieve that great underlying industry of the depression which the lack of an adequate foreign market for our surplus often brings. An opening has also been made for manufactured products that will undoubtedly, if this policy is maintained, greatly augment our export trade. The full benefits of these arrangements cannot be realized instantly. New lines of trade are to be opened; the commercial traveler must survey the fields; the manufacturer must adapt his goods to the new markets, and facilities for exchange must be established.

The Behring Sea Arbitration.

A treaty providing for the arbitration of the dispute between Great Britain and the States as to the killing of seals in the Behring Sea was concluded on the 29th of February last. This treaty was accompanied by an agreement prohibiting pelagic sealing pending the arbitration, and a vigorous effort was made during this season to drive out all poaching sealers from the Behring Sea. Some seizures were made and it is believed that the catch in the Behring Sea by poachers amounted to less than 500 seals. It is true, however, that in the north Pacific, while the seal herds were on their way to the passes between the Aleutian Islands, a very large number, probably 35,000, were taken. The existing statutes of the United States do not restrain our citizens from taking seals in the Pacific Ocean, and perhaps should not, unless the prohibition can be extended to the citizens of other nations. I recommend that power be given to the President by proclamation to prohibit the taking of seals in the north Pacific by American vessels in case, either as the result of the findings of the tribunal of arbitration or otherwise, the restraints can be applied to the vessels of all countries.

Commercial Relations with Canada.

During the past year a suggestion was received through the British Minister that the Canadian Government would like to confer as to the possibility of enlarging upon terms of mutual advantages, the commercial exchanges of Canada and of the United States, and a conference was held at Washington, with Mr. Blaine acting for the Government, and the British Minister at this capital, and three members of the Dominion Cabinet acting as commissioners on the part of Great Britain. The conference developed the fact that the Canadian Government was only prepared to offer to the United States in exchange for the concessions asked the admission of natural products. The statement was frankly made that favored rates could not be given to the United States as against the mother country. This admission, which was foreseen, necessarily terminated the conference upon this question. The benefits of an exchange of natural products would be almost wholly with the people of Canada. Some other topics of interest were considered in the conference, and have resulted in the making of a convention for examining the Alaskan boundary and the waters of the Passamaquoddy Bay, adjacent to Eastport, Me., and in the initiation of an arrangement for the protection of fish life in the coterminous and neighboring waters of our northern border.

The controversy as to the tolls upon the Welland Canal, which was presented to Congress at the last session by special message, having failed of adjustment, I felt constrained to exercise the power conferred by the act of July 26, 1892, and to proclaim a suspension of the free use of St. Mary's Falls Canal to cargoes in transit to ports in Canada. The Secretary of the Treasury established such tolls as were thought to be equivalent to the exactions unjustly levied upon our commerce in the Canadian canals.

If, as we must suppose, the political relations of Canada and the disposition of the Canadian Government are to remain unchanged, a somewhat radical revision of our trade relations should, I think, be made. Our relations must continue to be intimate, and they should be friendly. I regret to say, however, that in many of the controversies, notably as those to the fisheries on the Atlantic, the sealing interests on the Pacific, and the canal tolls, your negotiations with Great Britain have continuously been thwarted or retarded by unreasonable and unfriendly objections and protests from Canada. In the matter of the canal tolls our treaty rights were flagrantly disregarded. It is hardly too much to say that the Canadian Pacific and other railway lines which parallel our northern boundary are sustained by commerce having either its origin or terminus, or both, in the United States. Canadian railroads compete with those of the United States for our traffic, and without the restraints of our interstate commerce act. Their cars pass almost without detention into and out of our territory. The Canadian Pacific Railway brought into the United States from China and Japan, via British Columbia, during the year ended June 30, 1892, 23,239,639 pounds of freight, and it carried from the United States to be shipped to China and Japan, via British Columbia, 24,068,346 pounds of freight. There were also shipped from the United States over this road from Eastern ports of the United States Government to Pacific ports during the same year 13,912,013 pounds of freight, and there were received over this road at the United States eastern ports from ports on the Pacific coast 13,293,515 pounds of freight. Joseph Nimmo, Jr., former chief of the Bureau of Statistics, when before the Senate Select Committee on Relations with Canada, April 26, 1890, said that "the value of goods thus transported between different points in the United States across Canadian territory probably amounts to $100,000,000 a year."

There is no disposition on the part of the people or the Government of the United States to interfere in the smallest degree with the political relations of Canada. That question is wholly with her own people. It is time for us, however, to consider whether, if the present state of things and trend of things is to continue, our interchanges upon lines of land transportation should not be put upon a different basis, and our entire independence of Canadian canals and of the St. Lawrence as an outlet to the sea secured by the construction of an American canal around the falls of Niagara and the opening of ship communication between the great lakes and one of our own sea-ports. We should not hesitate to avail ourselves of our great natural trade advantages. We should withdraw the support which is given to the railroads and steamship lines of Canada by a traffic that properly belongs to us, and no longer furnish the earnings which lighten the otherwise crushing weight of the enormous public subsidies that have been given to them. The subject of the power of the treasury to deal with this matter without further legislation has been under consideration, but circumstances have postponed a conclusion. It is probable that a consideration of the propriety of a modification or abrogation of the article of the treaty of Washington relating to the transit of goods in bond is involved in any complete solution of the question.

The President proceeds to note the amicable adjustment of the controversy with the Chilian Government over the Baltimore affair and the payment by Chili of indemnity for the attack upon American sailors in the streets of Valparaiso, and he continues: I have endeavored in every way to assure our sister republics of Central and South America that the United States Government and its people have only the most friendly disposition toward them all. I have believed, however, while holding these sentiments in the greatest sincerity, that we must insist upon a just responsibility for any injuries inflicted upon our official representatives or upon our citizens. This insistence, kindly and justly, but firmly made, will, I believe, promote peace and mutual respect.

The President commends the projected submarine cable to Hawaii, and tells Congress that "we should before this have availed ourselves of the concession made many years ago to this Government for a harbor and naval station at Pearl River."

The friendly act of this government, the message continues, in expressing to the government of Italy its reprobation and abhorrence of the lynching of Italian subjects in New Orleans by the payment of 125,000 francs, or $24,330.90, was accepted by the King of Italy with every manifestation of gracious appreciation, and the incident has been highly promotive of mutual respect and good-will.

The message touches briefly upon the recent troubles on the Mexican border, which afforded this Government an opportunity to show its good-will toward the sister republic, and to negotiations pending with Spain for the protection of American missionaries in the Caroline islands, a satisfactory termination of which is anticipated.

I repeat with great earnestness the recommendation which I have made in several previous messages that prompt and adequate support be given to the American company engaged in the construction of the Nicaragua ship canal. It is impossible to overstate the value from every standpoint of this great enterprise, and I hope that there may be time, even in this Congress, to give it an impetus that will insure the early completion of the canal and secure to the United States its proper relation to it when completed.

The Brussels Conference.

The Congress has been already advised that the invitations of this government for the assembling of an international monetary conference to consider the question of an enlarged issue of silver was accepted by the nations to which they were issued. I have not doubted, and have taken occasion to express that belief, as well in the invitations issued for this conference as in my public message, that the free coinage of silver upon an agreed international ratio would greatly promote the interests of our people and equally those of other nations. It is too early to predict what result may be accomplished by the conference. If any temporary check or delay intervenes, I believe that very soon commercial conditions will compel the now reluctant governments to unite with us in this movement to secure the enlargement of the volume of money needed for the transaction of the business of the world.

Fiscal Condition of the Government.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury will attract especial interest in view of the many misleading statements that have been made as to the state of the public revenues. Three preliminary facts should not only be stated, but emphasized, before looking into details: First, that the public debt has been reduced since March 4, 1889, $259,074,200, and the annual interest charge, $11,684,469; second, that there have been paid out for pensions during this administration up to Nov. 1, 1892, $432,564,178.70, an excess of $114,466,386.09 over the sum expended during the period from March 1, 1885, to March 1, 1889; and, third, that under the existing tariff up to Dec. 1 about $93,000,000 of revenue, which would have been collected upon imported sugars if the duty had been maintained, has gone into the pockets of the people, and not into the public Treasury as before. If there are any who still think that the surplus should have been kept out of circulation by hoarding it in the treasury, or deposited in favored banks without interest, while the Government continued to pay to these very banks interest upon the bonds deposited as security for the deposits or who think that the extended pension legislation was a public robbery, or that the duties upon sugar should have been maintained, I am content to leave the argument where it now rests, while we wait to see whether these criticisms will take the form of legislation.

The revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, from all sources were $425,868,260.22, and the expenditures for all purposes were $415,953,806.56, leaving a balance of $9,914,453.66. There was paid during the year upon the public debt $40,570,467.98. The surplus in the treasury and bank redemption fund, passed by the act of July 14, 1890, to the general fund, furnished in large part the cash available and used for the payments made upon the public debt. Compared with the year 1891, our receipts from customs duties fell off $42,069,241.08, while our receipts from internal revenue increased from $8,284,823.13; leaving the net loss of revenue from these principal sources, $33,784,417.95. The net loss of revenue from all sources was $32,675,972.81. The revenues, estimated and actual, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, are placed by the Secretary at $463,336,350.44, and the expenditures at $461,336,350.44, showing a surplus of receipts over expenditures of $2,000,000. The cash balance in the treasury at the end of the fiscal year, it is estimated, will be $20,992,377.03.

So far as these figures are based upon estimates of receipts and expenditures for the remaining months of the current fiscal year, there are not only the usual elements of uncertainty but some added elements. New revenue legislation, or even the expectation of it, may seriously reduce the public revenues during the period of uncertainty and during the process of business adjustment to the new conditions when they become known. But the Secretary has very wisely refrained from guessing as to the effect of possible changes in our revenue laws, since the scope of those changes and the time of their taking effect can not in any degree be forecast or foretold by him. His estimates must be based upon existing laws and upon a continuance of existing business conditions, except so far as these conditions may be affected by causes other than new legislation.

The estimated receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, are $490,121,365.38, and the estimated appropriations $457,261,335.33, leaving an estimated surplus of receipts over the expenditures of $32,860,030.05. This does not include any payment to the sinking fund. In the recommendation of the Secretary that the sinking fund law be repealed I concur. The redemption of bonds since the passage of the law to June 30, 1892, has already exceeded the requirements by the sum of $990,510,681.49. The retirement of bonds in the future before maturity should be a matter of convenience, not of compulsion. We should not collect revenue for that purpose, but only use any casual surplus. To the balance of $32,860,030.05 of receipts over expenditures for the year 1894 should be added the estimated surplus at the beginning of the year, $20,992,377.03, and from this aggregate there must be deducted, as stated by the Secretary, about $44,000,000 of estimated unexpended appropriations.

Silver Purchases.

The public confidence in the purpose and ability of the Government to maintain the parity of all our money issues, whether coin or paper, must remain unshaken. The demand for gold in Europe, and the consequent calls upon us, are in a considerable degree the result of the efforts of some of the European governments to increase their gold reserves, and these efforts should be met by appropriate legislation upon our part. The conditions that have created this drain of the treasury gold are in an important degree political and not commercial. In view of the fact that a general revision of our revenue laws in the near future seems to be probable, it would be better that any changes should be a part of that revision rather than of a temporary nature.

During the last fiscal year the Secretary purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, 54,355,748 ounces of silver, and issued in payment therefor $51,106,468 in notes. The total purchases since the passage of the act have been 120,479,981 ounces, and the aggregate notes issued $116,783,590. The average price paid for silver during the year was 94 cents per ounce, the highest price being $1.02¾, July 1, 1891, and the lowest 83 cents March 23, 1892. In view of the fact that the monetary conference is now sitting, and that no conclusion has yet been reached, I withhold any recommendation as to legislation upon this subject.

The recommendations of the Secretary of War that the army be reorganized, and that the number of frontier posts be decreased and troops concentrated at such points as possess strategic advantages are indorsed by the President, and the work of the Department of Justice is particularly commended.

Court of Claims.

The aggregate of claims pending against the Government in the Court of Claims is enormous. Claims to the amount of nearly $400,000,000 for the taking of or injury to the property of persons claiming to be loyal during the war are now before that court for examination. When the others are added, the Indian depredation claim and the French spoliation claims, an aggregate is reached that is indeed startling. In the defense of these claims the Government is at a great disadvantage. The claimants have preserved their evidence, whereas the Government has to send agents to rumage the field for what they can find. This difficulty is peculiarly great where the fact to be established is the disloyalty of the claimant during the war. If this great threat against our revenues is to have no other check certainly Congress should supply the department of justice with appropriations sufficiently liberal to secure the best legal talent in the defense of these claims, and to pursue its vague search for evidence effectively.

Building Up an American Marine.

Reference is made to the report of the Postmaster General, an abstract of which has already been published. The policy of contracting with American ships for the transportation of foreign mails has borne satisfactory results. Under the law of March 3, 1891, contracts have been made by the Postmaster General for eleven mail routes. The expenditure involved by these contracts for the next fiscal year approximates $954,123.33. As one of the results already reached, sixteen American steamships of an aggregate tonnage of 57,400 tons, costing $7,400,000, have been built or contracted to be built in American shipyards. The estimated tonnage of all steamships required under existing contracts is 165,802, and when the full service required by these contracts is established there will be forty-one mail steamers under the American flag, with the probability of further necessary additions in the Brazilian and Argentine service. The contracts recently let for transatlantic service will result in the construction of five ships of 10,000 tons each, costing $9,000,000 or $10,000,000, and will add, with the City of New York and the City of Paris, to which the Treasury Department was authorized by legislation at the last session to give American registry, seven of the swiftest vessels on the sea to our naval reserve. The contracts made with the lines sailing to Central and South American ports have increased the frequency and shortened the time of the trips, added new ports of call, and sustained some lines that otherwise would almost certainly have been withdrawn. The service to Buenos Ayres is the first to the Argentine republic under the American flag. The service to Southampton, Boulogne, and Antwerp is also new, and is to be begun with the steamships City of New York and City of Paris in February next. I earnestly urge a continuance of the policy inaugurated by this legislation, and that the appropriations required to meet the obligations of the Government under the contracts may be made promptly, so that the lines that have entered into these engagements may not be embarrassed.

America as a Naval Power.

After noting the increase in the American navy during the past year the President directs attention to the improvement in naval construction. It is believed, he says, that as the result of new processes in the construction of armor plate our later ships will be clothed with defensive plates of higher resisting power than are found in any war vessel afloat. We were without torpedoes. Tests have been made to ascertain the relative efficiency of different constructions. A torpedo has been adopted and the work of construction is now being carried on successfully. We were without armor piercing shells and without a shop constructed and equipped for the construction of them. We are now making what is believed to be a projectile superior to any before in use. A smokeless powder has been developed and a slow burning powder for guns of large caliber. The development of a naval militia, which has been organized in eight States and brought into cordial and co-operative relation with the navy, is another important achievement. I recommend such legislation and appropriations as will encourage and develop this movement.

The Pension Bureau.

The work of the Interior Department is based upon the report of the Secretary published yesterday, and the several recommendations of that official are endorsed by the President, the Indian Bureau's efforts for the advancement of the Indians particularly eliciting commendation. The President expresses a hope that legislation will come which shall separate the administration of Indian affairs from party strife, particularly in the selection of agents at the several reservations.

As to pensions, the President says: I adhere to the views expressed in previous messages that the care of the disabled soldiers of the war of the rebellion is a matter of national concern and duty. Perhaps no emotion cools sooner than that of gratitude, but I cannot believe that this process has yet reached a point with our people that would sustain the policy of remitting the care of these disabled veterans to the inadequate agencies provided by local laws. The parade on the 20th of September last upon the streets of this capital of 60,000 of the surviving Union veterans of the war of the rebellion, was a most touching and thrilling episode, and the rich and gracious welcome extended to them by the District of Columbia, and the applause that greeted their progress from tens of thousands of people from all the States did much to revive the recollections of the grand review, when these men, and many thousands of others now in their graves, were welcomed with grateful joy as victors in a struggle in which the national unity, honor, and wealth were all at issue.

The Pacific Railways.

In my last annual message I called attention to the fact that some legislative action was necessary in order to protect the interests of the Government in its relations with the Union Pacific Railway. We must deal with the question as we find it and take that course which will, under existing conditions, best secure the interests of the United States.

Quarantine Regulations.

After reviewing the work of the Agricultural Department and its bearings upon the exports of provisions and breadstuffs, the President takes up the subject of quarantine regulations, and says:

The subject of quarantine regulations, inspection and control was brought suddenly to my attention by the arrival at our ports in August last of vessels infected with cholera. Quarantine regulations should be uniform at all our ports. Under the Constitution they are plainly within the exclusive Federal jurisdiction when and so far as Congress shall legislate. In my opinion, the whole subject should be taken into national control and adequate power given to the executive to protect people against plague invasions. On the 1st of September last I approved regulations establishing a twenty-day quarantine for all vessels bringing immigrants from foreign ports. This order will be continued in force. Some loss and suffering have resulted to passengers, but a due care for the homes of our people justifies in such cases the utmost precaution. There is danger that with the coming of spring cholera will appear and a liberal appropriation should be made at this session to enable our quarantine and port officers to exclude the deadly plague.

But the most careful and stringent quarantine regulations may not be sufficient absolutely to exclude the disease. The progress of medical and sanitary science has been such, however, that if approved precautions are taken at once to put all of our cities and towns in the best sanitary condition and a provision is made for isolating any sporadic cases and for a thorough disinfection, an epidemic can, I am sure, be avoided. We are peculiarly subject in our great ports to the spread of infectious disease by reason of the fact that unrestricted immigration brings to us out of European cities, in the overcrowded steerages of great steamships, a large number of persons whose surroundings make them the easy victims of the plague. This consideration, as well as those affecting the political, moral, and industrial interests of our country, lead me to renew the suggestion that admission to our country and to the high privileges of its citizenship should be more restricted and more carefully guarded. We have, I think, a right and owe a duty to our own people, and especially to our working people, not only to keep out the vicious, the ignorant, the civil disturber, the pauper, and the contract laborer, but to check the too great flow of immigration now coming by further limitations.

The World's Fair.

The report of the World's Columbian Exposition has not been submitted. That of the Board of Management of the Government exhibit has been received, and is herewith transmitted. The work of construction and of preparation for the opening of the Exposition in May next has progressed most satisfactorily, and upon a scale of liberality and magnificence that will worthily sustain the honor of the United States.

In reviewing the recommendation which I have made in three preceding annual messages that Congress should legislate for the protection of railroad employes against the dangers incident to the old and inadequate methods of braking and coupling cars which are still in use upon freight business, I do so with the hope that this Congress may take action on the subject.

Gerrymanders Considered.

I have, in the three annual messages which it has been my duty to submit to Congress, called attention to the evils and dangers connected with our election methods and practices as they are related to the choice of officers of the National Government. In my last annual message I endeavored to invoke serious attention to the evils of unfair apportionments for Congress. I cannot close this message without again calling attention to these grave and threatening evils. I had hoped that it was possible to secure a non-partisan inquiry by means of a commission into evils the existence of which is known to all, and that out of this might grow legislation from which all thought of partisan advantage should be eliminated, and only the higher thought appear of maintaining the freedom and purity of the ballot, and the equality of the elector without the guaranty of which the government could never have been formed and without the continuance of which it cannot continue to exist in peace and prosperity. It is time that mutual charges of unfairness and fraud between the great parties should cease and that the sincerity of those who profess a desire for pure and honest elections should be brought to the test of their willingness to free our legislation and our election methods from everything that tends to impair the public confidence in the announced result. The necessity for an inquiry and for legislation by Congress upon this subject is emphasized by the fact that the tendency of the legislation in some States in recent years has, in some important particulars, been away from and not toward free and fair elections and equal apportionments. Is it not time that we should come together on the high plane of patriotism while we devise methods that shall secure the right of every man qualified by law to cast a free ballot, and give to every such ballot an equal value in choosing our public officers and in directing the policy of the government?

Outrages by Mobs.

Lawlessness is not less such, but more, where it usurps the functions of peace officers and of the courts. The frequent lynching of colored people accused of crime is without the excuse which has sometimes been urged by mobs for a failure to pursue the appointed methods for the punishment of crime, that the accused have an undue influence over courts and juries.

Such acts are a reproach to the community where they occur, and so far as they can be made the subject of Federal jurisdiction, the strongest repressive legislation is demanded. A public sentiment that will sustain the officers of law in restraining mobs and in protecting accused persons in their custody, should be promoted by every possible means. The officer who gives his life in the brave discharge of this duty is worthy of special honor. No lesson needs to be so urgently impressed upon our people as this, that no worthy end or cause can be promoted by lawlessness.

In Conclusion.

This exhibit of the work of the Executive Departments is submitted to Congress and to the public in the hope that there will be found in it a due sense of responsibility and an earnest purpose to maintain the national honor and to promote the happiness and prosperity of all our people. And this brief exhibit of the growth and prosperity of the country will give us a level from which to note the increase or decadence that new legislative policies may bring to us. There is no reason why the national influence, power, and prosperity should not observe the same rate of increase that have characterized the past thirty years. We carry the great impulse and increase of these years into the future. There is no reason why in many lines of production we should not surpass all other nations as we have already done in some. There are no near frontiers to our possible development. Retrogression would be a crime.

"Cheap Girls."

The unpleasant phrase "cheap girls" has arrested my attention more than once, and I have wondered what sort of girls they are, writes Mrs. Lyman Abbott, in the Ladies' Home Journal. Are they those whose loud laughter and talking draws to them the attention of every one in the car? Are they those whose voices call us to the window as they pass? Do they wear skirts so narrow, shoes so tight, waists so tight, that their gait is an amusement or a marvel? Do they puff up their shoulders above their ears, and piece their skirts down from the top in order that they may sweep the streets? I wonder are they the girls who place themselves in the way of young men? Who "make errands" which will carry them into the business streets, and call frequently on girls who have brothers? How easily their flimsy device is seen through, and what sneers it occasions. Dear girls, don't be cheap. Don't make a "bargain counter" of your church vestibule, and offer your smiles and your vivacious talk to the man whose person and manners have pleased your fancy.—Our Girls.

The news that the Amazonian army in Dahomey had been overthrown is followed by the assurance that King Behanzin himself is a fugitive, disappearing into the desert as his only mode of escape from the victorious French forces. That long standing anomally of modern times has now dropped out of existence. The women soldiers numbered about six thousand and had been educated to cruelty of which few men in more civilized countries could be guilty. The rule with them was to mutilate their captives in the most horrible manner imaginable, their deeds being in keeping with the barbarism by which numbers of creatures were each year sacrificed to a brutal worship. The whole of this disgrace to civilization is wiped out and in its stead will gradually grow up a vast improvement upon it, though for many years it may be judged necessary to rule the natives as with a rod of iron, that being the only argument the force of which they can recognize. The merits of the case as between the Dahomeyans and the French may not be known sufficiently well to enable one to decide that the latter had good reason for the attack, but the result thereof is the wiping out of a huge, black spot, and is a positive benefit to humanity, whatever may have been the incentive to the act.

A Theological Diagnosis.

My brother, your trouble is not with the heart, it is a gastric disorder or a rebellion of the liver. You need a physician more than you do a clergyman. It is not sin that blots out your hope of heaven, but bile. It not only yellows your eyeball, and furs your tongue, and makes your head ache, but swoops upon your soul in dejections and forebodings.—Talmage.

Chris Schilling, of St. Louis, has made his record by eating a gallon of oysters in one hour on a bet of seventy-five cents. Mr. Schilling is not exactly the sort of man to be invited to a quiet dinner party in a family where they do not want the cook to go upon a strike.

WASHINGTON'S CHURCH.

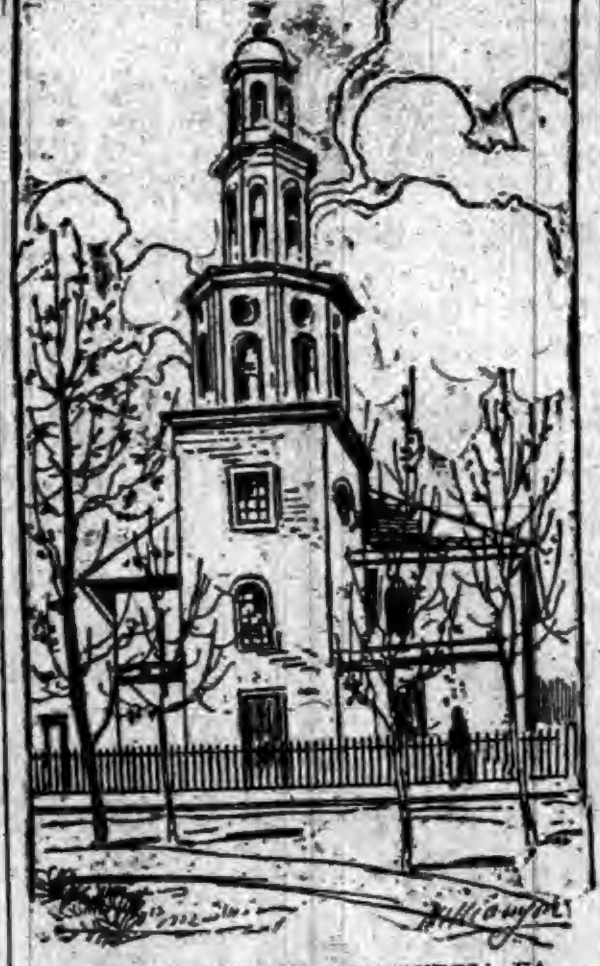
An Old Virginia Edifice Which Over a Century Has Not Changed.

"And this is Washington's pew. I suppose you would like to sit in it?"

Certainly I would. What American would neglect the opportunity to place himself in the identical seat occupied by the father of his country when at worship?

And so I replied to the old sexton who the other day was showing me through the ancient edifice at Alexandria, Va., known as Christ's Church, or, better, as "Washington's Church," says a newspaper writer.

"The far corner, please; there, that, they say, was Washington's favorite seat in the pew. Who occupies the pew now? Nobody regularly. It is reserved for strangers. A great many visitors come there, you know, and so the pew has some occupant every Sunday."



CHRIST'S CHURCH, ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The old church is full of interest to the visitor. It is practically what it was over a hundred years ago when George Washington was a member of its vestry. The building was completed in February, 1773, and on the 27th of that month Washington purchased pew No. 5, paying a handsome sum, and also agreeing to pay an annual rental of five pounds sterling. For years he occupied the pew regularly, and it has since always been designated by his name.

In those days all the box-like pews were double or nearly square, but since then partitions have been put in and two single pews made out of each double one. The Washington pew, however, remains as at first. The pulpit and reading desk are of later make, but are patterned after those in use in Washington's day, and even a part of the present pulpit is a relic of the original.

The illustration gives a correct idea of the appearance of the church.

Burning Smoke.

Nearly all of our large cities are more or less afflicted with a smoke nuisance and committees in Pittsburg, St. Louis, Chicago and other places have made reports on the subject and endeavored with more or less success to abate the trouble. Naturally there is a demand for an efficient means of preventing smoke and among the latest devices for the purpose is one invented by the eminent English naval engineer, A. R. Sennett. Mr. Sennett's investigations on the cause of smoke led him to place great reliance on the presence of hydrogen, steam or aqueous vapor in the furnace. From experiments he carried out in the injection of air, first by jets of steam and second by jets of compressed air, he found that the volume of air required for combustion when injected by steam was very considerably less than the volume required when injected by means of compressed air, results confirmed by other investigators. The points brought out by his experiments are summed up as follows: (1) An adequate volume of air must always be injected above the fuel; (2) the gases from the coal and the introduced air must be thoroughly agitated; (3) the gases from the coal, after admixture with the air, should be depressed and distributed in contact with the incandescent mass of fuel; (4) contact between the gas from the coal and the boiler plates should be prevented as much as possible until after admixture with the injected air; (5) adequate space should be provided for the expansion of the gases; (6) when average coal is used the volume of air injected upon the top of the fuel should be equal to at least one-half of the volume admitted through the bars; (7) considerably more steam should be present in the furnace than can be obtained from the hydrogen of the coal. In order to obtain these results Mr. Sennett has devised an instrument which he calls a transformer. Steam from the boiler is first superheated, and then passes to the injector. The steam and air pass from this injector to a deflecting plate just inside the fire-door, and in this way the current is distributed over the surface of the fuel. The trouble about smoke-consuming or smoke-preventing arrangements is generally that they increase the consumption of fuel. This does not appear to be the case with the apparatus under notice, however, for Prof. Kennedy finds as the result of tests that there was a saving of 10 per cent. due to its use in addition to the fact that it entirely abolished smoke.

THE new cruiser Cincinnati is a notable addition to the growing war fleet of the nation. She has a most effective armament, and her seagoing qualities and speed are beyond reproach. Uncle Sam is wise to build such vessels, and he can keep at it a long time before he will be likely to have too many of them.

IT is utterly impossible for the best men to please the whole world; and the sooner that is understood, and a position taken in view of this fact, the better. Do right, though you have enemies.

ATTACKING Columbus, whether in the press or from the pulpit, is rather foolish work. His hold on fame is not going to be loosened by a few adjectives.

Origin of Popular Phrases.

"Bit."—A name quite commonly given in the West and South before the late war, to the American dime. It arose from the custom forty years ago, when Spanish coins freely circulated in this country, of calling one of them, a small piece valued at 12½ cents, a "bit." If the pillars on the face of it were fresh and unworn, it was called a "long bit," but if worn smooth it was designated as a "short bit," and was worth but 10 cents. The word "bit," as applied to the American dime, was rendered obsolete by the disappearance of silver money during the rebellion.

"Where Ignorance is Bliss," Etc.—Thomas Gray (the author of "Gray's Elegy"), in his poem "On a Distant Prospect of Eton College," stanza ten, wrote:

> No more; where ignorance is bliss
> 'Tis folly to be wise.

"There is no Royal Road to Learning."—This phrase appears to have grown up like other common proverbs out of the experience of the thoughful. One of its earliest form is in Gray's "Fable of the Pack-horse and Carrier."

> Learning by study must be won,
> 'Twas ne'er entailed from sire to son.

"Yankee Doodle."—The air known as "Yankee Doodle" was originally "Nankee Doodle," and as old as the reign of Charles II. It was known in New England before the revolution, and one account of its appropriation in America as a National air is that after the battle of Lexington the brigade under Lord Percy marched out of Boston playing it in derisive allusion to the then popular nickname of the New Englanders, and that afterward the New Englanders, saying that the British troops had been made to dance to "Yankee Doodle," adopted the air as they had adopted the nickname. The verses sung to the tune since the days of the revolution were composed by Dr. Shackburg, a physician in the British army in America, in burlesque of a body of American militia. The citizens of the United States do not now recognize the air "Yankee Doodle," but "Hail Columbia" as their National air.

"O Jimminy!"—This common interjectional remark is a corruption of "O Gemini," a Lation invocation to the divine brothers, Castor and Pollux.

"Look Ere Thou Leap, See Ere Thou Go."—This quotation may be found in Heywood's Proverbs, 15–46; Tollett's Miscellany, 1557, and Tusser's Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry. A similar quotation, "Look before you ere you leap," is found in Butler's Hudibras.

The Judicious Wife.

A judicious wife, says Ruskin, is always nipping off from under her husband's moral nature little twigs that are growing in wrong directions. She keeps him in shape by continued pruning. If you say anything silly she will affectionately tell you so. If you declare you will do some absurd thing she will find some means of preventing you from doing it. And by far the chief part of all the common sense there is in this world belongs unquestionably to woman. The wisest things man commonly does are those which his wife counsels him to do. A wife is a grand wielder of the moral pruning knife. If Johnson's wife had lived there would have been no hoarding up of orange peel, no touching all the posts in walking along the streets, no eating and drinking with disgusting voracity. If Oliver Goldsmith had been married, he never would have worn that memorable and ridiculous coat. Whenever you find a man whom you know but little about oddly dressed, or talking absurdly, or exhibiting eccentricity of manner, you may be sure that he is not a married man, for the corners are rounded off, the little shoots pared away, in married men. Wives have generally much more sense than their husbands, even though they may be clever men. The wife's advice is like the ballast that keeps the ship steady.

It is too plain to need a demonstration by chart or diagram that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is what the people need everywhere, for cure of bronchial and pectoral troubles. It is a sure cure.

"Yes."

"How does she like you?"—Washington Star.

INSTEAD OF TRIFLING WITH A BAD COLD use Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant, which will loosen the phlegm, subdue inflammation, and certainly save your Lungs and Throat much dangerous wear and tear.

AFTER a young man begins to concentrate his attentions on one girl, the other girls stop laughing at his jokes.

DISEASE is unnatural and is but the proof that we are abusing Nature. It is claimed that Garfield Tea, a simple herb remedy, helps Nature to overcome this abuse.

FORGIVE a slap you receive to-day, and you will have a blow to forgive to-morrow.

A Dangerous Deadlock

Occurs when the sieve-like action of the kidneys is interrupted, and they partially cease to secrete from the blood those impurities for the escape of which they are such important channels. Bright's disease, diabetes, suppression of the urine, and weakness and inaction of the bladder—these are complaints to the relief of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is admirably adapted. These ailments unchecked are very formidable, and the utility of a recourse to this fine remedy and preventive cannot be pleaded with too much insistence. The Bitters is likewise efficacious in an incomparable degree for malaria, indigestion, costiveness, rheumatism and debility. In neuralgia it has also proved itself a sovereign medium of relief.

The Worm in the Chestnuts.

A Pittsburgh physician explains how the worm gets into the chestnut. When the nut is still green an insect comes along, and, hunting a warm place in which to have its eggs hatched, lights upon the green chestnut and stings it. At the same time it deposits some of its eggs in the opening thus made. The chestnut begins to ripen and at the same time the eggs are hatching. The insect selects chestnuts as a place for depositing its eggs as being the best adapted place by instinct. The floury matter in the nut turns to sugar, and sugar contains carbon, which produces heat.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

The Horrid Heathen.

A Maori whose requests for blankets had at last elicited a decided refusal from the missionary, exclaimed: "Kapai (good); no more blankets, no more hallelujahs," and thereupon returned to the faith of his fathers. No less humorous, though in another way, was the plea of a Maori in litigation for a piece of land. Being called on to tell the court on what proof he relied for his title, he pointed to the revival claimant and said simply: "I ate his father."

A Christmas Present from Dr. Talmage.

DR. TALMAGE, who has a genius for doing things on a gigantic scale, recently placed the largest book order ever recorded. It was for 100,000 beautiful OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES, fresh from the Oxford University Press of England, each Bible containing 1,450 pages, bound in leather, Divinity Circuit, gilt edges, and round corners. With these 100,000 Bibles it is the intention of Dr. Talmage to make 100,000 hearts happy by making a Christmas present to each new subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at $2.

DR. TALMAGE is editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is issued every Wednesday, and it is needless to say that it is edited in his happiest vein. It is filled with bright pictures and every issue contains a charming piece of music contributed by Ira D. Sankey.

The orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, since DR. TALMAGE's Christmas present was first mentioned by the press, are pouring in by mail, telegraph, and express at such a tremendous rate that it is quite evident that the supply will give out before the end of the present month. Each one of these Bibles contains a Concordance, Subject-Index, 12 beautiful Colored Maps, and a great quantity to a proper interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.

The best investment of a two-dollar note is to send it to T. DEWITT TALMAGE, 777 to 783 Bible House. Do it to-day.

Strange If True.

Although Bach and Handel were contemporaries, were of about the same age, born in the same neighborhood, practiced the same branch of the same art, and each was famous as an organist, there is no evidence that these two singularly gifted men ever met. A story relating a supposed contest between them was originated in a musical paper about fifty years ago, and has since been frequently printed, but has no foundation in fact.

"Three years ago, as a result of CATARRH, I entirely lost my hearing and was Deaf for More than a Year.

To my surprise and great joy when I had taken three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla I found my hearing was returning. I kept on till I had taken three more, and I can hear perfectly well. I am troubled but very little with the catarrh. I consider this a remarkable case." HERMAN HICKS, 30 Carter Street, Rochester, N. Y.

CURES SCROFULA

Mrs. E. J. Rowell, Medford, Mass., says her mother has been cured of Scrofula by the use of four bottles of S S S after having had much other treatment, and being reduced to quite a low condition of health, as it was thought she could not live.

S.S.S. Cured my little boy of hereditary scrofula which appeared all over his face. For a year I had given up all hope of his recovery, when finally I was induced to use S S S. A few bottles cured him, and no symptoms of the disease remain.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. JAMES R. WAITE,

Manager of Waite's Celebrated Comedy Co., Premium Band and Orchestra.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

You will remember the condition I was in five years ago, when I was afflicted with a combination of diseases, and thought there was NO HELP FOR ME. I tried all kinds of medicines, and scores of eminent physicians. My nerves were prostrated, producing dizziness, heart trouble and all the ills that make life miserable. I commenced to take and in three months I WAS PERFECTLY CURED. In my travels each year, when I see the thousands of physical wrecks, suffering from nervous prostration, taking prescriptions from local physicians who have no knowledge of their case, and whose death is certain, I feel like going to them and saying, "GET DR. MILES' NERVINE AND BE CURED." In my profession, where there are so many sufferers from overwork, mental prostration and nervous exhaustion, brought on by the character of the business engaged in, I would recommend "MILES' NERVINE" as a sure cure for all suffering from these causes.

Charles Hawthorn, the man who had his feet and hand taken off, is around on a small chair on wheels and is as full of fun as ever. He don't seem to worry mcuh about it.

This is Bad.

It is understood that the editor of the Dispatch had a very insulting piece in his paper last week in regard to the foot ball game Thanksgiving day at Garrett. He insulted the umpire and Garrett team by saying that "the game was not umpired fair" and that we used a foreign sprinter. In regard to the umpiring we made two touch downs that were fair but were not given. As to the foreign sprinter, the Auburn team had four men that were in the team last year, We do not wish to insult the Auburn team but do not wish the Dispatch to be quite so fast.

AN INCOME TAX.

Speech of Hon. C. A. O. McClellan in the House of Representatives, March 30, 1892.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 6007) to place woolen on the free list and reduce the duties on woolen goods—

MR McCLELLAN said:

MR CHAIRMAN: It is not my purpose to discuss the pending bill in detail That has been done so well by gentlemen who preceded me that it would be useless to travel over the same ground, as I could add nothing new to the arguments already made. That the subject of the bill is an important one no one will gainsay. No article could have been selected with which the doctrine of protection is more intimately connected, none where the duty imposed is more unjustifiable. But I wish to call the attention of the committee and the country to another branch of the subject of taxation, which must, if adopted, necessarily exert a great influence upon the general question under discussion, and that is the great injustice that is being done the poor people of this country by the system of unequal taxation imposed upon them by the republican party.

I also wish to point out some of the results of that legislation during the last twenty years, the danger to which it is leading us, and to suggest a remedy by which some of the evil consequences may be partially avoided. The system was vicious in its conception, unjust in theory, and appalling in results. The objections to it are almost innumerable. It takes by forced contributions from the poor for the benefit of the rich; it taxes the necessities of the people instead of their ability to pay; it taxes the hard earnings of labor and puts it into the hands of the wealthy; it prevents the exportation of our surplus agricultural products to other countries where they can not be produced, and where, if it were not for the high tariff imposed upon their goods, they would be received in exchange for products which they can manufacture at a less cost than we can; it increases the cost of our manufactured goods, thereby preventing us from competing with foreign manufacturers in the markets of the world, decreasing the demand for American labor, and destroying our commerce; it creates new and experimental industries, and taxes the people for maintenance, when it is certain that such industries can never be maintained here in competition with the natural advantages existing in such other countries against us It taxes the farmers north and west for the purpose of paying the farmers of the south a bounty for the crops raised by them. It is, in fact, a system of legalized piracy by which the corporations and trusts are enriched at the expense of the poor, the consumers.

Thirty years ago we were cursed with negro slavery; to-day we are cursed with slavery of both white and black. Five hundred million dollars per annum collected from the people of this country not in proportion to their ability to to pay, but in proportion to the amount of the products of the country their necessities compel them to consume. Who receive the benefits of it? The millionaires and the people of wealth. The Army and navy, United States courts, and most of the officers of the government are maintained for the benefit of the wealthy people. The internal improvements on our rivers and harbors are for the benefit of the rich. Yet the poor are called on to pay most of the expenses.

What do the Rockafellers, the Goulds, the Astors, the Carnegies, or the Vanderbilts care how much is expended by the government as long as they are not called on to contribute any of their wealth towards it?

In case of trouble in their great works, through the influence their wealth gives them, they are able to command the assistance of the Federal army and compel the people to pay the cost. Why this injustice, Mr. Chairman? I call upon those who forced this condition upon us and who are maintaining it, to explain.

Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who object to liberal appropriations for all worthy improvements. I would have the government build a navy that could portect us and preserve our honor and dignity among the nations of the earth. I would like to see our coasts and harbors improved and properly fortified. I would like to see our rivers and waterways improved and extended, so as to fully accommodate our growing inland commerce. I would like to see our postal and telegraph service enlarged and extended, so that every section of the country could be properly served at reasonable prices. I would like to see the free-delivery system enlarged so that in all the towns and rural districts the people might receive and deliver their mail at their own houses.

I would like to see a suitable building erected by the government for the use of every presidential postoffice in the United States. I would like to see good turnpike roads built and maintained by the government all over this country. I would like to see every soldier receive a pension for his patriotism and services. I would like to see our merchant marine multiplied and extended so that our flag would be a familiar sight in every part of the world. But above all, I would like to see a law passed by this congress to compel the millionaires to pay their due proportion of the taxes necessary to maintain all these things.

All this, and more, might have been accomplished at this time if the rich had been taxed for the last twenty-two years as the poor were, and yet we would have enough left to pay the national debt. For twenty two years the wealth of the country has paid no tax. And during that time the Government collected from the necessities of the people $4 000,000,000, all from the consumer.

Mothers and Daughter.

Over twelve years ago I was afflicted in a very serious female difficulty, and for the last sixteen months was under treatment of three of the very best physicians that money could employ. Under their skillful treatment I gradually grew worse until they decided they could render me no permanent help. One of my friends persuaded me to try a bottle of Dullam's Great German Female Uterine Tonic and after taking three bottles, can say I am in better health than I have been for twenty years, and am now sixty years old, but feel as young as at thirty.—$1 a bottle.

A Contractor's Advice.

MESSRS. DULLAM BROS.—Gentlemen:—I take great pleasure in testifying in behalf of Dullam's Great German Blood, Liver, Stomach and Kidney Cure. I can safely say that I never took such medicine as that to cleanse the liver, stomach and kidneys. I was suffering for years with biliousness, indigestion and loss of appetite and sleep. One bottle did for me more good than six months' other treatment, and I feel it my duty to testify in its behalf, so others may try it and get cured. Yours Truly,

Snowed In.

Jno. W. Rowen, of Des Moines, Iowa, while snow bound at Carroll, Iowa, through exposure, contracted a severe cold. After several useless trials of various remedies he purchased a bottle Cubeb Cough Cure, and says the cure was magical, and after taking two doses he could breathe freely and enjoy a good sleep that night undisturbed. Another case is on record where a lady had not slept more than one or two hours a night for months, who after using only one bottle, was well and happy.

A Much Married Woman.

Mrs. Fowler, of this city, was married last January to her sixth husband, and strange as it may seem, five of them died exactly two years from their marriage-day. Her present husband has been sick for the last four months with chronic jaundice, and was given up by four of the best physicians; as a last resort he began using Sulphur Bitters, and yesterday told our reporter that they had saved his life, smilingly saying that he guessed Mrs. Fowler would be unable to take a seventh better half for some time to come.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

The vote at the municipal election was 122. It was nearly equally divided and the increased number indicated growth of population. Party lines were broken as has frequently been the case down to the present, and in a vote of 62 republican, to 59 democrats, Jacob Walborn was chosen one of the town's trustees, the others being Griswold, Stahl, Myer and Lowry. Albert Robbins was elected clerk, John L. Davis, Assessor; John Otto, treasurer, and William Humes, marshal.

Political matters periodically stirred up the latent loyalty of people to respective parties and the novelty of a joint discussion of the issues of the day, between Judge Robert Lowry and William Williams, familiarly known as Bob Lowry and Billy Williams, attracted a large audience on August 14th, to the then capacious courtroom. Those privileged to hear the debate, while enjoying the speeches, were enabled to pass upon the intellectual ability and political soundness of those candidates for popular suffrage to congressional honors, in a far better degree than was possible when partisans in factional assemblies make statements calculated more to inflame zeal than to disseminate information.

A democratic or a republican campaign meeting in which speakers unchallenged malign the opposition rarely wins recruits to its standard, and the debate in question stands as the sole instance of its application to a popular canvass in this county.

The interest in education was demonstrated more in the attendance than in provision of the means to maintain the schools. The trustees in 1866, were S. W. Sprott, G. Kuhlman and T. D. Gross. At an April session of the board, Mr. Sprott was instructed to cause necessary repairs to be made on the school building and about the grounds and the special levy for payment of such like expenses was put at 25c., on each $100, valuation of town reality and personal. Again in November, the trustees met to consider applications and proposals of teachers desiring situations in the Auburn schools and as a result, contracted with Spencer Dills to be principal at $65 a month, Thomas J. Saxton, first assistant at $50, Miss Frank Clark, intermediate at $30, and Miss Julia Hoover, primary, at $25.

The term began Dec. 3rd, with the condition that its duration would be four months or until the funds were exhausted. The enrollment was 221, and the average daily attendance was 160. The text books superior in some respects to those now in use, were McGuffey's readers, Ray's arithmetic, Mitchell's and Monteith's geographies and Pinneo's grammar. In the advanced classes, the the books used and the number in each study were as follows: Cutter's physiology 18, Wilson's history of the United States 14, Mahew's book keeping 12, Ray's Algebra 7, and one each Davies' geometry and Andrews and Stoddard's first book in Latin. Physiology and history had recently been added to the branches in which teachers were expected to be examined and that fact explains the number pursuing those previously neglected and to many, distasteful studies.

Within the well-known pages of the books numerated, most of those in middle age garnered their school lore. Their introduction marked an epoch in schooling and the duration of their retention was evidence of their merit and popularity.

When Mr. Sprott was empowered to put the school building in repair, he was at the same time directed to exercise a general superintendence of the schools, provide fuel and whatever else was essential to their operation.

It is on record that at a meeting held in the office of the woolen factory an examination of his accounts and vouchers showed an overpayment in behalf of the schools of $247.21 for which an order was given him on the school treasurer who was himself. He was, at once, clerk secretary and treasurer of the school board, faithfully attended to his several duties and for his services was allowed $40.00. An additional bill for services to John Sheffer of $17.44 increased the debt to $204 67 and the fund was thus more than exhausted.

In his capacity of school examiner, Spencer Dills was restricted to what he could accomplish as a teacher in which he was popular and successful; but when he had desired to see district schools in session to assist teachers by suggestions, awaken interest among patrons and to weed out the incompetent, he was checked by an ill-advised order by the Board of County Commissioners to the effect that "the school examiner of De Kalb county be notified to visit no more schools on the expense of the county until further orders." Mr. Dills acquiesced in the order and associating with him T. J. Saxton, had conducted a teachers' term which was largely attended to their and the pupil's mutual profit, and it was a pleasant sight at close of school each day to see the numerous groups of young people coming down the walk from the old academy and scattering to their temporary homes among our citizens. It was gratifying to those who had been instrumental in securing for the town such advantages to find that the county seat held precedence in education and it was a promise of prosperity since good schools are one of the strongest and best incentives to intelligent people to locate where they are established.

The Democratic Press.

The Indianapolis Sentinel, that did so much to help in the great victory we have just won, has these good words for the democratic papers of the state at large.

It gives us much pleasure to say that the democratic newspapers of Indiana, without a single exception so far as we observed, made a magnificent record throughout the campaign. They presented the issues ably and clearly, were in the aggressive from the start, and have overmatched their republican competitors at every point. The democratic press of Indiana will deserve a large share of the credit, for the victory which is at hand.

HERE IS ALL THE NEWS

BOILED DOWN FOR OUR INTELLIGENT READERS.

A Destructive Cyclone Sweeps Over Louisiana—Dr. Smith's Sentence—A Bad Railroad Wreck—Held Up a Train—Mr. Blaine Getting Better—A Family Poisoned.

IT BLEW.

A Destructive Cyclone Sweeps Over Louisiana.

A special from Delta, La., tells of a terrible cyclone which passed two miles above the town carrying death and destruction in its path. Thos. Young's residence was completely demolished and its occupants were buried in its ruins. Relief parties were organized at once at Richmond for the succor of the unfortunates. About forty were rescued from the ruins of their residences all dangerously wounded.

W. H. Freeman, a colored man.

A colored woman, name unknown.

A colored baby, unidentified.

The wounded are:

S. R. Young, left arm broken and internally injured.

Mrs. S. R. Young, seriously injured.

Daughter of the Youngs, both legs broken.

Negro woman and child, seriously injured.

The cyclone cut a path 300 yards wide, carrying everything near it. Large pine trees were uprooted and snapped in pieces like pipestems. The residence of S. A. Lowe was completely destroyed and his household effects were scattered for miles.

Mr. Blaine Has Not Joined the Catholic Church.

Washington special: James G. Blaine, J., said to a reporter of the United Press: "Father is progressing nicely. We have no apprehension as to the final outcome of his indisposition."

"Has your father or the family made any definite plans for his proposed trip when the weather will permit?" was asked.

"No: not as I know."

"How about the rumors that Dr. Ducey and Cardinal Gibbons inducted your father into the Catholic Church?"

"There is no truth in the rumor. Mr. Ducey called to see father only in a friendly way, as did Cardinal Gibbons yesterday. That is all there is to it."

Mrs. Damroch has joined the family here.

A Wreck in Missouri.

Kansas City special: The eastbound Santa Fe passenger train No. 2, went through a bridge between Camden and Floyd, forty miles east of here. The baggage car and one coach went through into the creek and several passengers are reported badly hurt. It is expected that the baggage man was killed outright, but as the wires are all down on account of the storm it is impossible to get the details of the wreck. The Santa Fe is sending all trains via the Wabash to Lexington junction. The officials here admit there was a serious wreck, but claim no one was killed outright. Superintendent McClellan has gone to the scene of the wreck and the wounded will doubtless be brought to this city.

A Family Poisoned.

Three of the Brown family at White Oak, Ohio, who partook of cake with which rat poison was mixed, have since died, and three others are in a critical condition. The presence of poison was not detected until after the family were taken ill and it had become thoroughly distributed in their systems. The persons who died were a little girl of 6, one of 5, and a son aged 18. They suffered the greatest agony and turned black after they died. Of the others, the father, mother and a girl aged 20 are in a very precarious condition.

Dr. Smith's Sentence.

Cincinnati special: The penalty in the Smith heresy case was agreed upon by the Presbytery. The vote stood 31 ayes; 26 nays. The sentence read as follows: "Dr. Smith is suspended from the ministry of the Presbyterian church until such time as he shall make manifest to the satisfaction of the Presbytery his renunciation of the errors he has been found to hold and his solemn purpose no longer to teach or propagate them."

A Bad Wreck.

A local on the Pittsburgh, Akron and Western railroad was derailed near Carey, Ohio, and the passenger coach with a number of freight cars went down an embankment, killing Mrs. Mary Roberts. The wreck took fire and burned. The other passengers were not seriously injured.

An Editor Disabled from Duty.

W. Fred. Pyle of the Geneva (Ind.) Herald, has sold his paper to Otis G. Rayn. Mr. Pyle is the editor who accidentally had his head and face peppered with shot while hunting with a friend several weeks ago. His eyesight is so impaired as to incapacitate him from editorial labor.

Held Up a Train.

A special from Ironton, Ohio, says that the Chesapeake and Ohio east-bound passenger train was stopped by robbers Monday night, between Huntington and Guyandotte, W. Va. Two passengers were shot by the robbers, one of them fatally.

A Bank Fails.

Black Hill's National Bank, of Rapid City, S. D., has suspended payment and turned over its affairs to State Bank Examiner Diamond.

Fraudulent Failure in Hamburg.

The business community of Hamburg is excited over the fraudulent failure of Carrow & Bartels, stock brokers. Carrow has absconded. Bartels has surrendered. The liabilities amount to 7,500,000 marks. A number of business concerns are badly involved by the failure.

Helped Murder Hennessy.

William C. Sauers, a French Creole, under arrest in Denver for burglary, has confessed that he had a hand in the murder of Chief of Police Hennessy in New Orleans, which was followed by the lynching of a number of Italians and led to diplomatic difficulties with Italy.

DEPARTMENT OF LAW.

Attorney General Miller's Report Submitted to Congress.

Attorney General W. H. H. Miller, in his annual report, submitted to Congress, says that during the fiscal year 1892 there were paid:

To United States Marshals	$ 673,824.16
To Attorneys	250,3[illegible]
To Assistant Attorneys	123,[illegible]
To Clerks	138,[illegible]
To Jurors	649,2[illegible]
To Witnesses	1,040,277.71
To Commissioners	100,000.00
To Prisoners	276,816.44
To Rents	42,071.44
To Bailiffs	135,837.40
To Miscellaneous	159,107.83
Total	$4,748,239.03

During the fiscal year 2,039 civil suits were terminated. In 1,018 of these judgments were for the United States; in 136 against the United States; and 802 were either nolle prosequied, dismissed, or discontinued. There were also terminated 16,724 criminal prosecutions; 194 of these were prosecutions under the customs laws, in which there were 121 convictions, twenty-one acquittals, and fifty-two were entered nol pros, discontinued, or quashed; 7,268 under the internal revenue laws, in which there were 4,137 convictions and 1,336 acquittals; 1,635 under postoffice laws, in which there were 1,174 convictions and 143 acquittals; 131 under election laws, in which there were 13 convictions and 9 acquittals; 1,142 under intercourse and naturalization acts, in which there were 924 convictions and 71 acquittals; 51 for embezzlement, in which there where 35 convictions and 5 acquittals; 8,431 miscellaneous prosecutions, in which there were 5,046 convictions and 1,507 acquittals. There were pending July 1, 1892, 9,730 criminal prosecutions. The aggregate amount of the judgments rendered in favor of the United States in civil suits during the last year was $276,500.92, and the amount actually collected $67,223.56, while $20,793.45 was obtained during the year on judgments rendered in former years for the United States, and $102,135.62 was otherwise realized in civil suits. The aggregate amount of fines, forfeitures and penalties imposed during the year in criminal prosecutions was $682,271.95, and the amount collected during the year was $133,223.44, while $13,663.87 was realized on penalties imposed in former years.

PUZZLING OVER SILVER.

The Monetary Conference Making Very Little Progress.

Bruzzels advices say that an important section of the international monetary convention holds that M. de Rothschild's withdrawal of his plan for a solution of the silver question does not debar the further discussion of his proposals by the conference, the committee to which the plan was referred having presented it for the consideration of the conference, thus taking it out of the hands of M. de Rothschild. M. Saincteliette, a Belgian delegate who supports the De Rothschild plan, with the Moritz Levy amendment substituting silver for small gold coins, held a conference with Sir C. Fremantle, one of the British delegates and deputy master of the British mint, and Senor Toca, a Spanish delegate, on the question of putting the amended De Rothschild plan to a vote of the conference. Both Senor Toca and M. Saincteliette hold that a failure of the conference can yet be averted by a majority of the delegates recommending either the Levy project or the amended Rothschild plan. The scheme proposed by C. F. Teitjen, the Danish delegate, is treated with indifference. It may be dropped without discussion by the conference. The proposals advanced by Sir C. Houldsworth, though applauded by the pronounced bimetalist delegates yesterday, is not considered by his colleagues worth wasting time over in discussion. His plan will probably be referred to a committee tomorrow and will not be heard of again. The uncertain attitude of the French delegates is influencing the other representatives whose countries belong to the Latin union.

MORTGAGED PARENTS' GRAVE.

George Sellars' Unusual Method of Effecting a Loan.

A Boston young man named George Sellars, who, by inheritance, became proprietor of a lot in Mount Hope Cemetery in which the bodies of his father and mother were buried, recently borrowed of Charles A. Loud, a Boston money lender, $100 on the deed of the lot, giving a note for sixty days for $110 and a written agreement to have the bodies of his father and mother removed in case of default. The sixty days elapsed, but the note was not taken up, and the money lender called upon the trustees of the cemetery to remove the bodies and transfer the lot to him. The trustees, however, declined to recognize the propriety or legality of the transaction between Sellers and Loud and refused to record any such transfer. They claim that no sale of any lot in the cemetery is legitimate which is made in violation of their regulations, one of which stipulates that no body shall be removed without their consent.

RAZED BY DYNAMITE.

Burlington, Ind., Residents Adopt Heroic Measures to Get Rid of a Saloon.

A dispatch sent out from Logansport, Ind., says: For some time the residents of the little town of Burlington, just west of this city, have been agitated over the presence of a saloon in their town, of which John Graham was proprietor. Some time ago an attempt was made to burn the building, but it failed. Wednesday morning at 2:30 o'clock the saloon was blown up with dynamite. The building was razed and the fixtures were reduced to atoms. Nobody seems to know who placed the bomb, and no arrests have been made. The town is highly excited. No one was injured.

May Be a Long Struggle.

Grand Chief D. G. Ramsay, of the order of railway telegraphers, sent the following dispatch along the line of the Rock Island Road Wednesday night: "Rock Island officials positively refuse to treat with us as your committee as representing either the employes or order, although 575 of the 635 operators on the system have requested us to do so. By a unanimous vote a strike is authorized to take effect on the Rock Island and Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern system at 10 o'clock Thursday morning. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway is controlled by the Rock Island and is urging its operators to non-union work; furthermore it has violated the agreement recently made. Stop work, but protect company property now on hand. Remain firm, disregard all rumors, and success will crown us in the end. L. M. Coons, Chairman. Approved, D. G. Ramsay, Grand Chief."

Another Jump in Whisky.

Another advance has been made in the price of distillery goods at Peoria, Ill. The advance is 10 cents per wine gallon on alcohol and 5 cents per proof gallon on spirits and rectified goods.

Swindling Bank Cashier Arrested.

At Memphis, B. J. Martin, the cashier who looted the Webster Bank at Eudora, Miss., leaving the stockholders nothing but the vaults and building, was arrested.

The Fiends.

Mr. and Mrs. William Pushman, of Butte Mont., were locked up charged by a coroner's jury with killing their babe by feeding it on pins and pounding its head.

Ten Reported Killed.

It is reported that the Jersey Central cannon ball train collided with a freight at Bayonne. Ten persons are said to have been killed.

One Half-Price Kiss for $250.

Several weeks ago Louis Haas met a Miss Palmer on the street at Indianapolis, and being unable to resist the impulse to kiss her, gave her a rousing smack on the lips. She resented the familiarity by having him arrested, and Judge Cox fined him $500 for assault. Governor Chase remitted one-half of the fine on the ground that it was excessive, holding that, though a kiss is a luxury, half of the amount would recompense the State for the injury to the peace and dignity which the commonwealth had suffered.

POOR SENT TO GOTHAM.

Massachusetts Authorities Sending Inmates of Almshouses to New York.

The New York Evening World prints the following: "For months and even years past the State charity authorities of Massachusetts have been sending their paupers, idiots and incurables to this city by wholesale, and dumping them in batches of a dozen or more at a time upon the town without any means of support or subsistence. A gang of eight of these Massachusetts State paupers was landed in this city from the steamer Pilgrim, of the Fall River Line. They were brought here under charge of Thomas Doane, who is said to be the authorized agent of the State Board of Lunacy and Charity of Massachusetts. Six of them came directly from Tewksbury almshouse of unsavory repute."

HAVOC WROUGHT BY CYCLONE.

Several Persons Seriously Injured and Much Property Destroyed.

Additional news of the ravages of the recent cyclone near Brenham, Texas, is just coming in. Near that city the wind demolished everything in its path. Among the seriously injured are Mrs. Aggie Lane and her two sons; Frank King and two children; Felix Robertson and child, the latter fatally; four members of Josie Jones' family; Mrs. Jurgan and Warren McCowan. Many families are homeless and utterly destitute. The cyclone was accompanied by a pelting rain, and in some places was followed by a furious hailstorm.

About Advertisements.

It is said of the late Jay Gould that he first conceived the idea of attempting to acquire a business education from the inducements offered by Hobart College in a small advertisement appearing in the local paper which made weekly visits to the Gould household. At the age of 14 years young Gould entered this same college, and from the institution afterward went forth into the business world, to become the greatest financier of the age. This is but one instance of where the reading of advertisements has led to prosperity and greatness, and it also goes to illustrate the fact that the advertising columns of a newspaper often contain the most valuable reading. This may be true of the paper now before you; at any rate it will be to your interest to read all of the advertisements.

Animals from Manitoba for the Fair.

Winnepeg will furnish a very interesting portion of the natural history exhibit at the World's Fair. Dan McDonald's large collection of wild animals, including ten elk and moose and six bears, have been purchased by an agent of the Government, and will be shipped to Chicago. This collection will be supplemented by Sir Donald A. Smith's herd of buffalo, now at Silver Heights.

Long Fast of a Black Prisoner.

At Columbus, Ohio, "Big Liz," the colored female convict who has been voluntarily fasting since the last week in November, was release Friday from close confinement, to which she had been subjected as a punishment for infraction of prison rules. She consented at once to take food. She had taken nothing but water 256 hours and showed no signs of weakness.

Workmen Hurt by Molten Metal.

At Youngstown, Ohio, while employes of the Brown-Bonnell Iron Company were working in mill No. 1 a workman dumped a cinder-buggy, and the molten metal coming in contact with the water caused a terrific explosion that was heard throughout the city. Joseph Gristh, John White, and Charles McGowan, standing near, were all painfully burned.

Leaped 125 Feet and Lives.

Mamie Sweet, aged 12 years, daughter of the head waiter at the Wyoming House, Scranton, Pa., leaped from a seventh story window at her home on Lackawanna avenue to escape punishment for having wrongly delivered a package for her mother. She fell 125 feet, and suffered no injury other than a dislocated shoulder and a severe cut on one leg.

Received a Check from Cleveland.

W. R. Holbrook, of Browsville, Tenn., has received from Grover Cleveland a check for $50 for the widow and children of the late R. A. Bancroft, who was killed by the premature discharge of a cannon at a Democratic rally. Mrs. Holbrook sent a newspaper account of the tragedy to Mr. Cleveland, who promptly sent the check.

Must Pay Wages Weekly.

Factory Inspector Connelly, of Albany, is winner in a suit against the St. Regis Leather Company, of St. Regis Falls. The company failed to obey the provisions of the act compelling weekly payments and the factory inspector sued. The company settled by paying $75 fine and promising to obey the law.

Warren Gets Six Years.

Tommy Warren, the former featherweight champion, has been sentenced to six years in the Texas penitentiary for murdering a negro saloon porter, while trying to shoot a fellow gambler.

Dragged to Death.

J. C. Mann, an Oklahoma farmer, was dragged to death by a runaway team.

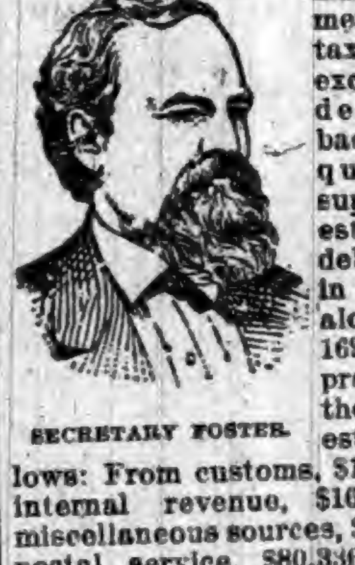
ABOUT OUR FINANCES.

ANNUAL REPORT OF SECRETARY FOSTER.

Revenues and Expenditures of the Last Fiscal Year—Election Modifies Figures—Repeal of Sinking Fund Laws Recommended—Redemption Reserve Should Be Increased.

The Country's Cash.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the government revenues from all sources during the last fiscal year were $425,868,260, and the total expenditures $415,953,806, leaving a surplus of $9,914,453. With the cash balance, the national bank redemption fund and a few small items added, this surplus was $40,750,488, which was applied to the payment of the public debt. As compared with the fiscal year 1891 the receipts for 1892 have fallen off $32,675,972, the principal losses being customs receipts, $42,069,241, and in profits on coinage, $5,681,479. On the other hand, there was a gain of $8,284,823 in internal revenue receipts, $4,998,690 in postal service and in sales of District of Columbia bonds of $2,412,744.



SECRETARY FOSTER.

In the ordinary expenditures there was a decrease of $10,349,354, which is accounted for by diminished payments for discount taxes, refund for excessive customs, deposits, drawbacks, census, quartermaster's supplies and interest on the public debt, the decrease in the last item alone being $14,169,019. For the present fiscal year the revenues are estimated as follows: From customs, $198,000,000; from internal revenue, $165,000,000; from miscellaneous sources, $20,000,000; from postal service, $80,336,350; total estimated revenues, $463,336,350. The expenditures for the same period are estimated as follows: For the civil establishment, $108,000,000; for the military establishment, $49,000,000; for the naval establishment, $31,000,000; for the Indian service, $9,000,000; for pensions, $158,000,000; for interest on the public debt, $26,000,000; for postal service, $80,336,350; total estimated expenditure, $461,336,350; leaving an estimated surplus for the year of $2,000,000.

The available cash balance in the treasury at the end of the present fiscal year is stated at $120,992,377. The revenues for the fiscal year of 1894 are estimated at $490,121,365 and the appropriations required $457,261,335, exclusive of the sinking fund, or an estimated surplus of $32,860,030, which, with the cash balance above gold reserve, would make the available balance $53,852,407, and deducting accrued or accruing obligations (mail contracts and redemptions), would leave the balance $47,852,407.

Chargeable against this are unexpended river and harbor and ordnance appropriations, amounting to $44,000,000, and no account is taken of the sinking fund requirements, amounting to $48,600,000, beyond redemptions estimated at $5,000,000.

Estimates Based on the McKinley Law.

The estimated receipts, says Secretary Foster, are based upon conditions prevailing prior to the late election. Public opinion having decreed a change of policy, particularly in the tariff laws, the altered conditions resulting therefrom render it impossible at the present time to estimate the annual income with any marked degree of accuracy, and it is impossible to predict the effect that such proposed radical changes would have upon the future revenues of the government. The secretary further says that he will not estimate further, but that the inevitable result of the tariff reduction agitation will be a falling off in importations and in revenue, the extent of which no one can measure. He says, however, that all the facts fully justify the opinion that the large increase of receipts ascribed to the marvelous prosperity of the country under the present revenue system would, if continued, enable the department during the coming fiscal year to meet all obligations without the slightest impairment of its cash, and thereafter continue to show a material improvement in its condition.

Touching the gold reserve, the report says, the Treasury has difficulty with the limited amount of cash on hand above the $100,000,000 redemption fund to keep a sufficient stock of gold, and if the shipments continue as large as they have been during the last two years, the gold in the treasury will be diminished below the reserve line. The maintenance of silver at par has also increased the possible charge upon the gold reserve and therefore the Secretary suggests that the reserve for the redemption of Government obligations should be increased to the extent of at least 20 per cent. of the amount of treasury notes issued or to be issued under the act of July 14, 1890.

In regard to the monetary conference he says: "This conference is now in session. As yet little is known as to what its action may be beyond the general fact that the subject of the better use of silver as a money metal is receiving its earnest attention."

On the subject of public buildings, the Secretary says that the expenditures during the year ended Sept. 30 last were $6,741,286, and the outstanding contract liabilities $2,834,408, making a total of $9,575,694.

The subject of the World's Fair is briefly dismissed with the statement that satisfactory progress has been made in the preparation of the department's exhibit, in the arrangement of the customs laws and regulations, and upon the Government buildings.

Speaking of the subject of immigration, the Secretary is clearly of the opinion that only by a rigid examination made at the place of departure, can the prohibitive features of the law be executed with any considerable degree of efficiency.

COST OF ENFORCING THE CHINESE ACT.

Variously Estimated at from $10,000,000 to $200,000 or Less.

Representative Geary does not believe the cost of deporting the Chinese of the United States will reach $10,000,000. The census shows a Chinese population of 107,000, and under the law those who do not register and sit for their photographs must be sent home at Government expense. Upon this basis it is calculated that more than 100,000 of them will have to be deported as soon as the year of grace expires on May 6 next. The cost of sending them back to China is estimated at $100 apiece. According to Representative Geary's reckoning, the cost of deportation need not be more than $20 a head. That is more than it cost these same Chinamen to come to the United States, and the California member says they might as well be sent back in the same style in which they came. Again, he thinks the Chinese residents of this country are only waiting to see whether the Government authorities are in earnest. If they find that the law is to be rigidly enforced, they will nearly all march up and be registered and photographed before the year of grace expires. Already between 400 and 500 have availed themselves of the privilege accorded them by the law and are preparing to stay. "I do not believe there will be 10,000 Chinamen left unregistered on the 6th of May," says Mr. Geary. "Even if we had to send that many back at a cost of $20 apiece or $200,000, it would be getting rid of them very cheaply." Mr. Geary suggests that the United States naval vessels might carry them back to China. This would lessen the cost of deportation to the Government and at the same time give the navy something to do.

ROADS FOR FARMERS.

The Congress at Indianapolis Attacks the Question with Energy.

The second day's session of the Indiana Road Congress at Indianapolis, was attended by 400 or 5000 delegates. While the congress is divided as to what steps should be taken to secure better roads it is apparent that the outcome will be at least a healthy public sentiment in favor of good roads, which will result eventually in some desirable legislation. The farmers who are in a majority in the congress have not had a great deal to say, but whenever they have spoken they have opposed any movement which proposes to increase their taxes or add to their bonded indebtedness.

At the opening of the session Rufus Magee of Logansport offered a resolution that the World's Fair be opened on Sunday. The resolution was laid on the table by the congress without discussion. The Illinois Highway Improvement Association sent a letter of greeting to the congress, and stated that for twenty years it had been trying to reform the road laws of Illinois, and now began to see daylight. The letter stated that the Governor-elect and a majority of the members of the Legislature were pledged to road reformation.

The first paper of the day was by W. P. Carmichael, of Wellingford. It dealt with "Some Criticisms of the Present System of Road-Making in Indiana." In the discussion of the paper Mr. Brown, of Fayette County, said that there are in the State about forty thousand miles of road. He estimates that the roads could all be put in good condition at a cost of $800 a mile. This would entail an expense of $2.50 an acre for the land in the State. This cost could be distributed over ten years and would cost the owners of the land 25 cents an acre each year. He thought that this expense would not be burdensome.

Mr. Martindale said that the idea prevailed that Indiana was behind her sister States in the construction of roads. That was a mistake. The supervisor system, he said, was defective in itself. It had not been executed as it might have been. It was established at a time when it was necessary to go from village to village. The best that could be done with it was to use it in keeping the next roads passable. He said that if the delegates came here with the intention of "ripping up" the present law they were on a mistaken mission. The thing to do was to amend and better the present laws.

Prof. W. B. Johnson, of Franklin College, in an address, said that the roads of the State were faulty in the essential particulars of good engineering. Roads, too, he said, were faulty as to construction of bridges and drainage, which was the most important factor. The natural soil, clay, was strong enough to support any load placed upon it. Along the roads were deep ditches, but they do not carry water. Drainage under the road is almost wholly unknown. The present supervision of roads, he averred, was faulty. Supervisors were generally intelligent men, but they lacked technical knowledge of road-building and maintenance. It was desirable to have a trained corps of men to build roads and keep them in repair.

J. A. Robinson, of Shelby County, a People's party man, said he had reached the conclusion that any effort to tamper with the present road law would result in the getting of no law at all. He believed with many farmers that entirely too much money was spent inside the court houses on the road questions. He said he believed that any report which looked to the increase of the bonded indebtedness of the farmers would receive a black eye in the Legislature. It seemed to him that there were men who were always ready to put additional burdens on the farmers. The men who had built this nation were the farmers behind the plow. Progress, he said, declared that the people who supported this nation had a right to demand that the general government come out here and assist in making good roads. Mr. Robinson made a long plea for the farmer.

The congress was furnished a statement from the State Auditor in the afternoon showing that the total road tax in Indiana in 1892 was $2,269,675. This sum, it was stated, did not include taxes raised for free turnpikes or for bridges. Many of the delegates expressed the opinion that this amount of money, if wisely spent each year, ought to build a great many good roads.

FARMERS ARE ANGRY.

British Agriculturists Seek John Bull's Protection.

A national conference of British agriculturists was held in the St. James Hall, Picadilly, London, in conformity with resolutions adopted by various chambers of agriculture throughout Great Britain, to the effect that some decisive step should be taken at once to relieve the distressed condition of British trade in general and of British agriculture in particular, and also declaring that:

"No permanent good can be attained without some stringent measures being adopted by which the British producer shall be placed upon a footing where he can compete with the foreign producer upon fairer terms, especially as regards manufactured goods that can be produced in this country, and that relieving the land of a portion of its burden will only partly meet the case."

Representatives were present from nearly every Chamber of Agriculture in the United Kingdom, and, the report says, doleful tales were interchanged among the farmers present of farms deserted, the soil untilled, and agriculture brought to the verge of ruin. There was a general consensus in favor of protection for agricultural products.

Newsy Paragraphs.

Senator Gibson, it is now thought, will recover.

William Nichols, a Cleveland mechanic, has inherited $2,000,000 by the death of his grandmother in England.

The story that Senator Hill is to be counsel of the Equitable Life at a salary of $25 000 a year is said to be untrue.

A revenue cutter has been sent to the Oregon coast to capture the British schooner Cornelius, which is preparing to smuggle sixty Chinamen into the United States.

The Italian Consul has demanded an investigation into the killing of Francisco Carazzo, an Italian, by two Cincinnati policemen. The Italian was intoxicated and stabbed both officers.

The Rev. Dr. J. B. Lowery, of St. Louis, preached a sensational sermon, in which he attacked the lives of Emma Abbott, P. S. Gilmore, P. T. Barnum, and Jay Gould, claiming that their influence had been bad.

THE WAY THINGS RUN

IN THE GREATEST OF GREAT STATES, INDIANA.

Things Which Have Lately Happened Within Its Borders—Some Pleasant and Some Sad Reading.

For the Care of Federal Buildings.

Secretary Foster has recommended to Congress that appropriations be made as follows for the care of Federal buildings in Indiana during the next fiscal year:

Indianapolis—Janitor and other help, $6,320; fuel, light, water, ice, etc., $6,876.

Lafayette—Janitor, $600; fuel, etc., $545.

Evansville—Employes, $2,500; fuel, etc., $2,388.

New Albany—Help, $1,680; fuel, etc., $1,195.

For improvements of the ground about the Evansville Marine Hospital $2,000 is recommended.

Minor State Items.

An 800-barrel oil well has been drilled in near Portland.

Kokomo people object to paying the high natural-gas rates.

Shelbyville people are again kicking about impure drinking water.

The First Christian Church of Muncie will build an elegant new house of worship.

Rev. Thomas Ross, an aged minister of Anderson, was struck by a train and perhaps fatally injured.

The extensive window glass works in Muncie are tied up. The employes demand a new scale of wages.

O. E. Murry of Losantville, had his arm nearly severed from his body by a circular saw in the spoke factory.

Mrs. Betsey Coons, an old woman near Greenfield, was found dead in a cornfield near her home. Heart disease.

The liquor war is again on in Fairmount. Another saloon has opened and the teetotalars of that good little town are furious.

Rev. J. W. Porter, for the past two years editor and proprietor of the Plainfield Progress, has disposed of the plant to L. C. Cooper.

Spencer is to have bottling works, the object being to bottle and place on sale, throughout the United States, the mineral water of that town.

Louis Hartman, aged 22, a son of Joseph Hartman, near Valparaiso, was run over and instantly killed by a train on the Illinois Central track at Chicago.

Tom Southard, who was overcome by escaping natural gas while sleeping in an undertaking establishment at Crawfordsville, is completely paralyzed in his left arm.

Charles Blackstone of Martinsville, for years foreman of the Daily Reporter, office, has quit newspaper work, having bought an interest in a sanitarium at that city.

Saloonists have applied for licenses in the towns of Bainbridge and Cloverdale. The citizens are up in arms and declare that they will permit no liquor shops to exist.

Emmet Post, G. A. R. of Wabash, has passed resolutions condemning the desecration of soldiers' graves, and also offers a reward for the arrest and conviction of the vandals.

F. R. Moore of Hartford City, in the employ of the Ft. W., C. & L. Railway, was instantly killed at Eaton, Delaware County. He attempted to mount an engine, and fell under the wheels.

Frank Henisie of Anderson, aged 20, at Alexandria, met with an accident that will prove fatal. Henisie is a brakeman on the Michigan division of the Big Four, and fell under the wheels while making a running switch.

Bert Phillips, Conductor on the Chicago & Indiana Coal Railroad, while loading his revolver, at Brazil, was probably fatally injured by an accidental discharge of the weapon. The ball entered the groin, ranging upward.

Frederick Baumgartner, a pioneer resident of LaPorte, died, aged 83. For the past twenty years he was one of the Trustees of the LaPorte Savings Bank, and was Second Vice-President of that institution at the time of his death.

John Perkins, agent for the Hall Safe Company, had to break open the safe of the late Samuel Goldbach at Jeffersonville, the latter having forgotten to give the combination to his wife before he died. It contained many valuable papers.

Marion Lawson, the 15-year-old son of Nathan Lawson, was killed twelve miles south of Wabash, by the accidental discharge of his gun while out hunting. The entire load entered his groin. He lived several hours after the accident.

The Crawfordsville police have received instructions from the Mayor to strictly enforce the saloon closing law. They raided a saloon after 11 o'clock and requested the bartender to close up. He said he would, but the policemen peeped through a transom and saw him sell a drink. He was fined $21.60.

A national bank has been organized at Elwood, with a capital of $200,000, one-half of which is paid in. Col. A. L. Conger of Akron, O., will be President. A building for its use will be erected. Other stockholders are R. L. Leeson, James Overshelmer, Dr. S. W. Edwins, John Deal, J. Meyer and J. F. Rodefor.

E. J. Hurley, employed by the natural gas company as inspector of the pipe-line between Hobart and Ainsworth, is missing. His time-book was found floating in Deep River, and it is supposed when crossing the river the ice broke through and he was drowned. His home was in Wellsville, N. Y. He has a sister in Chicago. The river will be dragged when the ice breaks up.

A party of tramps have settled down for the winter in an old shanty near Wabash. The knights of the road came from widely different parts of the country.

The natural-gas company at Fort Wayne has cut off all the manufactories from using gas until cold weather has passed. This became necessary to give private consumers sufficient gas for heating purposes. The gas company is now putting down large additional mains from the Montpelier field to the city, which will be completed in January, when it is expected to supply manufacturers again.

Patents have been granted to Indiana inventors as follows: Howard A. Ackerman, North Indianapolis, rack; Samuel Axtell, Elkhart, blotter; George J. Pine, Goshen, sickle grinder; Emil Dietz, Indianapolis, box fastener; Edwin Finn, Elkhart, boring and screw-driving machine; Frank E. Hardman, Indianapolis, elevators; William C. Lockhart, Waterloo, spray nozzle; Robert G. May, Grandview, kitchen cabinet; John W. Miller, Bellmore, grate shelf; Marion W. Ryland, Warsaw, assignor to C. J. Keen, Toledo, Ohio, hame tag; William H. Turner, Indianapolis, heating apparatus; James J. Wood, Fort Wayne, electric arc lamp and connecting plate for dynamos.

MR. J. L. WEAVER.

LIVURA M'F'G. Co.,

DEAR SIRS:—"Last winter I had La Grippe in its worst form, leaving me in a terrible condition, my Brain was confused, my Heart weak, and my legs refused to hold me up, and the muscles were so sore that it was painful to lie down. I had continual Headache, and everything I ate distressed me. I could not work, sleep, or eat, and my right side became numb. Several doctors told me I had Incipient Paralysis, and that I could get no better. I grew so weak that I could not leave the house.

Hearing of PITCHER'S LIVURA I got a bottle and it helped me from the first. I took 4 bottles in all, and am PERFECTLY WELL in every way, and now work all day. I know that

ROASTER & BAKER

FOR MEATS, FOWL, FISH, ETC., AND FOR BAKING BREAD, CAKES AND PUDDINGS.

BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious juices of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be more palatable, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by

THE BOND OF FLESH.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

He soon contrived to murmur in my ear: "I would not hesitate. Olaf Aveling is ready whenever you are. Better take what risk there is than go on, like this, in anxiety and self-torment."

"Very well," I answered, "tell him, if you see him before I do, that I am willing it shall be to-morrow night."

And to-morrow night it was. But before then I had a long talk with Linda. To some of this Conrad listened, and I thought that he did so with a hungry eagerness, varied by suspicious glances at myself. The poor fellow seemed to have some distressing doubt of my own continued love for him. I well knew that this was at the root of all his uneasiness. It refreshed me wonderfully when he at length yielded either to my will power or his own weariness and lapsed into a feverish yet decided slumber.

I promptly addressed Linda then with these direct and tremulous words:

"You have shown me that you care for me. I—I can only speak in whispers like this, or he will hear. Do you understand?"

"Yes," she answered, faintly, drooping her eyes.

"Oh, Linda," I pursued, "how much do you really care for me?"

"I, Victor?" she faltered; "why, I'm your fond, devoted sister. Have I not said this to you more than once?"

"It has meant nothing to me, Linda, I—I love you in another way from that. You must have seen?"

"Victor, what are you saying?"

"Then you think me madly foolish?"

"Oh, yes, yes; why not?"

"You mean—because of him?"

"Conrad—yes."

"But listen, Linda. If I were freed from him, what then?"

"Freed from Conrad? Oh, you can't be serious—you can't."

"But I am. There is a possibility of our separation. Aveling has told you nothing of it?"

"No, no," she answered, in consternation and affright. "Victor, you don't dream that such a thing could be accomplished?"

I controlled my yearning to tell her the real truth.

"It certainly might be accomplished, Linda." And here I seized her hand, raining soft and soundless kisses upon it. "If it were, Linda, what then?"

"What then?" she repeated, bewilderedly, letting me retain her hand. Then, on a sudden, precipitately rising, she threw her arms about my neck and kissed me full on the lips. Afterward, like a flash, she glided from my sight.

I felt, with great, fierce, intoxicating thrills that I had had my answer. And such an answer! It nerved me for untold bodily agony to come.

That night, after Conrad and I had retired, I knew that the operation would occur. For some time my brother lay sleepless at my side, and plied me with questions.

"Why are you so wakeful, Victor?" he queried.

"I, Conrad?" came my response. "It is you who are wakeful. You know I do not sleep as readily as yourself."

"But you're excited. Your heart is beating fast. Why is that?"

"You only imagine, Conrad."

"No, no; I feel it beat. I feel it all through my frame. Why do I feel your heart beat like this, Victor? Why? Why?"

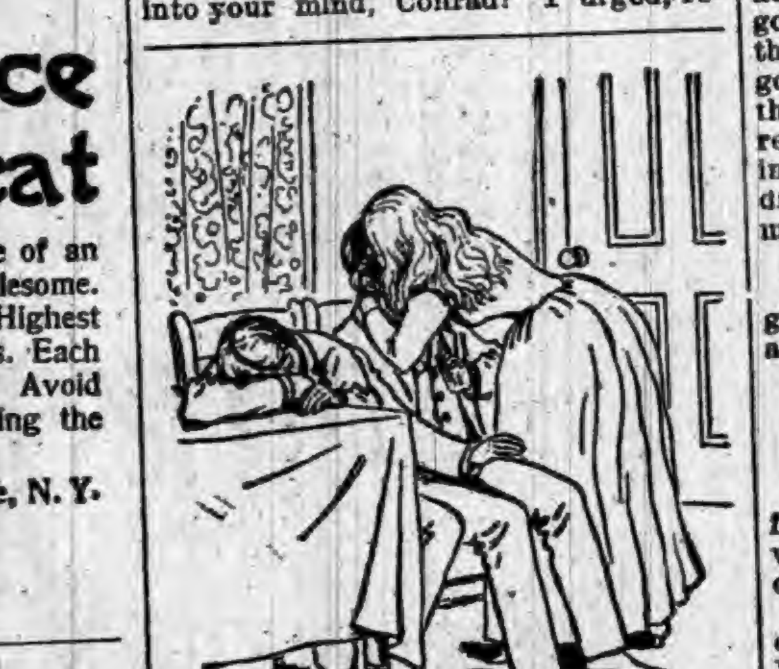
"You do not, Conrad," I strove to say calmly, "you only fancy it."

"Fancy it! Pah! You're unhappy about something. Ah, I know—I know," and his voice became tearful. "You're sorry we're joined together. You—you want to have us cut apart. Am I not right, Victor?"

"No," I said, steadying my voice as best I could. "No, indeed. There, are you satisfied?"

"I—I can't be."

"What puts such strange thoughts into your mind, Conrad?" I urged reproachfully. Meanwhile I was using all my hypnotic power to induce sleep in him, for I knew that Aveling and his fellow physicians must now be waiting not far away, ready to appear at the instant that I should sound a peal from the small bell on the wall just above my pillow.



SHE THREW HER ARMS ABOUT MY NECK.

"Yes, yes," persisted Conrad, with wild plaintiveness, "I am right! I am right!" Here he gave a dreadful shudder. "But I'll never consent to an operation, Victor, never!" And now he embraced me as if in suppliant alarm. "If I did, you might recover, but I would die."

"No, Victor."

"Yes, that is what they've all said—all except Dr. Aveling, and he wants to make himself famous at any price. It's not that I'm so afraid to die, Victor—not that I even fear dying at all."

"No, Conrad?"

"But it's leaving you. Ah, if we could both go together. Then I should not care in the least."

I turned, feeling like a Judas, and kissed him on the brow. "We probably will go together," I said, "when our times comes," and I meant what I said, though in a sense wholly different from that in which he doubtless took my painful words.

It seemed an eternity before he fell asleep. I was remorseful, and yet burningly bent on carrying out my project. Somehow I already hated myself for the very force of determination which controlled me.

Conscience, however, kept applying to its hurt one sovereign lenitive. Had not Aveling assurred me that our chances of life would be equal? I reposed all my self-justification on that sole assurance. For the rest, my love of Linda made action, consent, acquiescence almost fatally easy.

When poor Conrad slept, and I was at last confident that he did so, I sounded the bell.

Aveling entered very softly. In no time I had assisted him to place the sponge of ether at Conrad's nostrils. The light in the room was still dim. But I could see Aveling's face perfectly. It was calm, and perhaps a little paler than usual.

"You're excited," he said, with his hand on my pulse.

"Oh, naturally," I answered. "Is everything ready?"

"Everything."

"The other physicians are waiting in the next room?"

"Yes, and the work must necessarily be brief. You will have no suffering. Would you care to see Schreiner for a moment?"

"Does he desire it?" I asked.

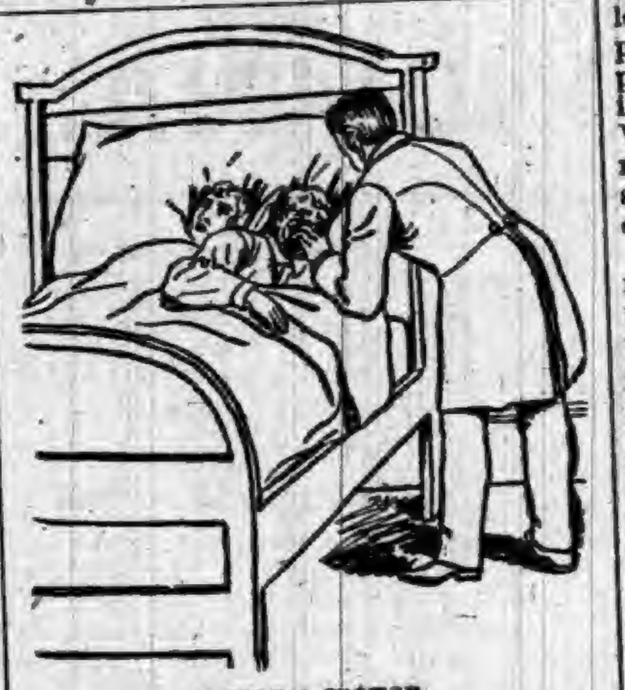
"He does and does not. He is unnerved, and——"

"Very well; don't let us meet, then. He might unnerve me." I gave a faint, broken laugh now. "It is so horrid to take that drug. Could I not go through the thing without it?"

"No, no!" refused Aveling, "don't dream of it. All hope of safety lies in your perfect quietude and unconsciousness."

"Very well," I said. Just then the breathing of Conrad at my side grew stertorous, and a languor, whose cause I could not but know, stole through my veins.

In another moment I felt a sponge touch my own nostrils. Then there came a struggle against the heavy, asphyxiating vapors of the anæsthetic.



I FELT A SPONGE.

And just before I quite lost all count of things I have a clear recollection of seeing the lights of the room turned up to their fullest extent and several male figures trooping in through an open door.

That was all. * * * Immediately after I became unconscious Conrad and I must have been lifted from our bed into the adjacent room and placed on an operating table prepared to receive us.

CHAPTER III.

I remember nothing until a period which must have been two or three hours later. And then, as it now recurs to me, I was so weak and yet thoroughly peaceful that I had no desire to use my memory at all. This was no doubt a result of the great blood-loss which I had sustained. Afterward came a blank.

I learned, later, that this blank lasted for nearly five days. The nurses watching me twice decided that I had ceased to live. Then vitality flickered back into a vague semblance of its old sway.

What I first clearly recall is refusing to drink a certain potion put by the nurse to my lips, and saying with vehemence that I had already eaten and drank more than was good for me. At this time my watchers were afraid that I might die of starvation, since the injections of nourishment on which I had been living had begun to fail of their nutritive office.

But from that hour, straight along, I began to recuperate. Once started, my bodily recovery was rapid. Not so, however, my mental recovery. For a good while I saw Conrad at my side, though he was no longer there. For a good while I spoke to him and thought that he returned my answers. The realization that we had been separated in a bodily way crept upon me with drowsy slowness. At last I inquired of my nurse:

"Where is my brother?"

"We thought it best, sir," came the glib reply, "that you should be kept apart while you're both so ill."

"Then he is alive?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

"Thank God! And has he suffered?"

"Suffered? Oh, no, sir; not at all."

I heard myself heave a strong, grateful sigh just as I sank into a sleep which those few sentences made one of exhaustion.

But a little later I rallied most appreciably. Still to weak too leave my bed, I could yet hold converse with two or three doctors who visited me. The absence of Aveling became a source of surprise, and I soon inquired for him.

"He has been called away," said one of the doctors.

"Yes—to Paris, I believe," struck in another; and then I saw them exchange a quick, peculiar smile—a smile which I was destined presently to understand.

"Where is my dear old friend, Oscar Schreiner?" I next questioned. "Why does he not come to me—he of all others?"

"We thought you were not strong enough yet," I was answered.

"Not strong enough?" I returned, almost mockingly; "why, that is really absurd. Let him come at once."

But they refused, and three good days had passed before Oscar appeared at my bed-side. He was very grave of demeanor, and looked somewhat haggard. After a little while, during which he held my hand and stroked it with fondness, he broke to me the tidings that Conrad had died (wholly without pain and still unconscious) on the evening of the operation.

"Dead! Conrad dead!" I cried, and swooned completely away.

More days passed before I learned news equally harrowing, in a way even far more so. Desiring most earnestly to see Linda, I was told that I could not, for the reason that she had become Mrs. Olaf Aveling, and was on her wedding tour with her new-married husband.

Then the whole hateful truth burst upon me. Trembling with passionate revolt and disgust, I rose from the great arm-chair in which I was seated, and shook my clenched hand at Oscar.

"Olaf Aveling wanted to perform that operation," I cried, "because he believed it would kill me also."

"Victor!" exclaimed Oscar Schreiner, shocked and horrified, "how can you denounce as a murderer the man who has given you your liberty?"

"Liberty!" I echoed, with a scornful sneer. "What is my liberty worth, now that Linda is lost to me—Linda whom I loved with my whole soul?"

Oscar visibly shuddered and raised one repelling hand.

"I had no dream that you cared for her like this," he began, "until Aveling himself told me."

"And then," I shouted, "you forced her to marry that treacherous devil!"

"I persuaded her——"

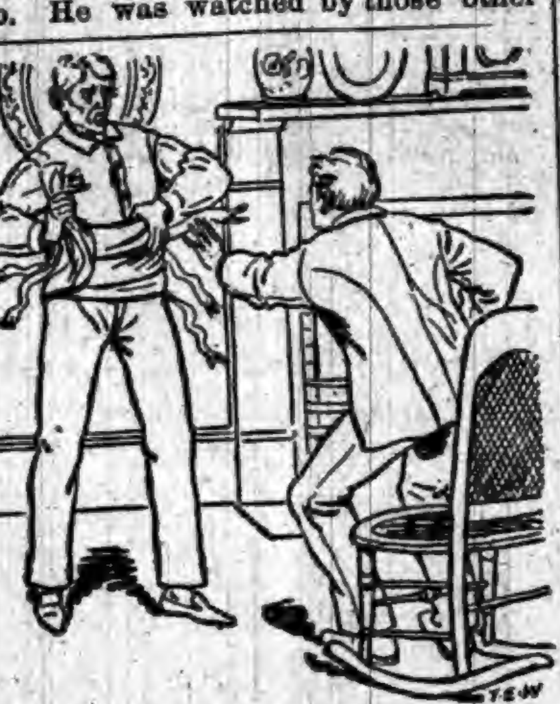
"You forced her," I struck in. "Yes, you must have forced her, for she loved me, she loved me. I had seen it; I had felt it through every fiber of my life!"

"But, Victor, listen. It seemed such a sacrilege for her to marry you, after Conrad's death. Forgive me if I thought this, but——"

"You consented, however, that she should marry the assassin of my brother."

"Oh, Victor! Think! If he had wished to kill you, might he not have done so?"

I broke into a laugh of bitter irony. "No. He was watched by those other doctors. And you yourself have told me that I was only saved by a miracle."



"I'LL REOPEN IT MYSELF."

"Victor, Victor," sighed my listener. "Remember that you are not yet well—that excitement like this may reopen your wound!"

"I'll reopen it myself," now rang from my lips. And with reckless hands I tore from my side the bandages which clung to it. A great flow of blood followed, and for days I was once more prostrated. I wanted to die, and even prayed for death. But health asserted itself in obstinate refusal of my prayer. Within another month I had completely recovered, and as soon as regained strength permitted I departed from Oscar Schreiner's house.

Almost immediately I went back to my native town among the Tyrolese mountains, and have lived there in solitude and retirement ever since. I am an old man now, and the story of the severed bond of flesh has become half-forgotten. It gave Olaf Aveling a great surgical reputation, however, and he has grown rich in consequence.

Hundreds of times, in my regret and repentance at the death of poor Conrad, I have felt like taking my own life. But that is all past now; I am in a measure quite at peace. Past, too, are the wildly vengeful impulses to seek out Olaf Aveling and end his life by a retributive blow of hate. I comprehend the utter failure of my new existence, yet strive to convince myself that it is a penance justly inflicted for having presumed to tamper with the decrees of an inscrutable destiny.

Often do I bless the mighty hills which engird me, and often it seems to me that they have somehow taught me noble and wholesome lessons. I watch their grandeur for hours, and learn from it (or, perhaps, only fancy that I learn) the sacred wisdom of patience.

The Hop-Pickers.

A chronicler of the past and present records, in the New York Evening Post, the degeneracy of the business of hop-picking in the interior of New York State. In his boyhood all the young men and women who were in need of money or out of health repaired to the country annually, picked hops for the farmers, shared the meals of their wives and daughters, and returned home with a nest-egg of $25 or so. The earning were very acceptable to the poorer workers, and to the others they meant some extra fineries or a trip to New York. The occupation was regarded as proper and desirable, and moreover, the day often ended with a country dance or some other innocent amusement. But the introduction of the city hop-pickers has spoiled this bucolic picture. The chronicler says of them: "The pickers are gathered indiscriminately and are composed of an indolent class of men and women, who do not care to labor industriously for the money they would earn, but go rather for the 'good time' there is in it. Drinking and revelry, an absence of all decency, brawls, midnight marauding, and an occasional murder are the results of their annual visit to the hop-field. It follows that decent and industrious country people have been driven from a good occupation."

Life in the Polar Regions.

It is impossible to form an idea of a tempest in the polar seas. The icebergs are like floating rocks whirled along a rapid current. The huge crystal mountains dash against each other, backward and forward, bursting with a roar like thunder, and returning to the charge until losing their equilibrium they tumble over in a cloud of spray, upheaving the icefields, which fall afterwards like the crack of a whiplash on the boiling sea. The sea-gulls fly away screaming, and often a black shining whale comes for an instant puffing to the surface. When the midnight sun grazes the horizon, the floating mountains and the rocks seem immersed in a wave of beautiful purple light. The cold is by no means so insupportable as is supposed. We passed from a heated cabin at thirty degrees above zero to forty-seven degrees below zero in the open air, without inconvenience. A much higher degree of cold becomes, however, insufferable if there is wind. At fifteen degrees below zero a steam, as if from a boiling kettle, rises from the water. At once frozen by the wind, it falls in a fine powder. This phenomena is called sea-smoke. At forty degrees the snow and human bodies also smoke, which smoke changes at once into millions of tiny particles, like needles of ice, which fill the air and make a light continuous noise, like the rustle of a stiff silk. At this temperature the trunks of trees burst with a loud report, the rocks break up, and the earth opens and vomits smoking water. Knives break in cutting butter. Cigars go out by contact with the ice on the beard. To talk is fatiguing. At night the eyelids are covered with a crust of ice, which must be carefully removed before one can open them.

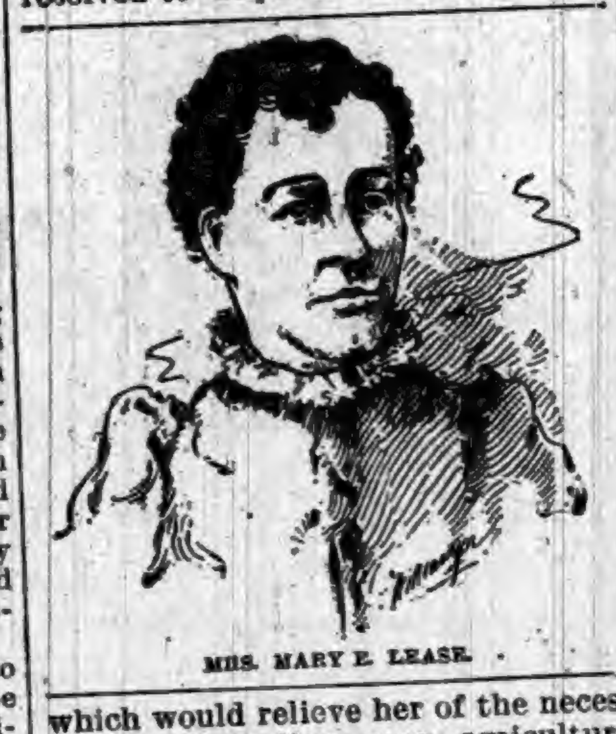
If you have been tempted into evil, fly from it; it is not falling into the water, but lying in it that drowns.

MARY E. LEASE.

Her Remarkable Career as a Stump Orator and Pleader.

Mrs. Mary Lease, who accompanied Gen. Weaver on his stumping tour throughout the country and divided the honors with him, is a remarkable woman. Those who have heard her declare she has the gift of oratory in a marked degree. Her deep, powerful, and resonant voice commands instant attention, and enables her hearers to catch every word under circumstances most trying to a public speaker. Her style is her own, the sentences short and strong and poured forth with a volubility rarely equaled. It is a torrent of speech launched at the most vulnerable point of attack indicated by her keen intelligence. Her figure on the platform is commanding. She is tall and stately in bearing, and was once introduced by Gen. Weaver to a St. Louis audience as "Our Queen Mary."

Mrs. Lease's past experience has been more calculated to crush ambition than to engender it. Many years spent on a Kansas farm, under the most trying conditions of slender means, could not stamp out the determination to rise. It caused her to ponder upon the causes which were leading to a decline of the prosperity of the farming classes, and she resolved to acquire some profession which would relieve her of the necessity for depending upon agriculture for a living. She turned to the study of law, and was thus engaged when the Union Labor campaign of 1888 claimed her services as a speaker. She entered the campaign of 1896 with renewed zest, speaking almost daily in the open air and apparently never tiring. The People's party, under whatever name, has always claimed and had her services, not only in political campaigns preceding elections, but all the year round.



MRS. MARY E. LEASE.

The domestic side of Mrs. Lease's life is not the least of her creditable characteristics. She is a fond mother and good wife. Her home is in Wichita, where her husband, who is a pharmacist, is engaged in business. Her children are bright and well trained, and the eldest son, now almost grown, will probably follow her to the rostrum. Ireland was her birthplace.

Edible Insects.

Young wasp grubs fried in butter do not at first sight appear to be the most alluring dish in the world, yet they have been pronounced delicious by those hardy experimenters who have tried them. Fed as they are upon the sweetest juices drawn from fruits and flowers, they naturally possess a delicate flavor. Perhaps the best way to prepare them is to bake them in a comb. Incidentally to experiments conducted by government experts respecting the edible qualities of insects, a number of trials were made of a beverage particularly novel, which might be termed "antade." A few hundred ants were crushed at a time, in a mortar with a pestle, and the liquid from them, after being strained, was mixed just like lemon juice, with water and sugar. The resulting beverage resembles lemonade so closely as to be scarcely distinguishable from it. The reason why is very easy to explain. Formic acid is the nearest approach to citric acid, which gives lemon juice its flavor, known to the chemist. In fact, there is very little difference between them. Awhile ago a St. Louis caterer made from grasshoppers a soup which was pronounced delicious by many people who were offered an opportunity of tasting it. It closely resembled bisque. A learned professor treated some friends of his on one occasion to curry of grasshopper and grasshopper croquettes without informing them as to the nature of the banquet, but an unlucky hind leg discovered in one of the croquettes revealed the secret. Among the people of Java cockchafers are a favorite food. Those admirable economists, the Chinese, eat the chrysalids of silkworms after the silk has been wound off them, frying them in butter or lard, adding the yelk of an egg or two and seasoning with pepper, salt and vinegar. In order to acquire the plumpness so admired by their spouses, Turkish women consume in large quantities the grubs of certain beetles. It would require some courage to test for one's self the excellence of any of these dishes; and yet what may not be dared by a race which long ago discovered the edible properties of the eel and the oyster?

A Hybrid Corkscrew.

It is said that an Atchison genius has invented a vine called potmato, which bears potatoes under the ground and tomatoes above ground. The idea is able, but the potamato vine seems to be a reminiscence of the ingenious combination which Dr. Loring, of Salem, Mass., discovered when Minister to Portugal. Dr. Loring grafted the common corkscrew upon the cork tree, and succeeded in producing corks with the corkscrew growing in them. For this brilliant service to agriculture the King of Portugal decorated him with the Grand Order of the Leather Medal (second class)

Watch Crystals.

Watch crystals are made by blowing a sphere of glass about one yard in diameter, after which the discs are cut from it by a pair of compasses having a diamond at the extremity of one leg.

Life in Brazil.

Levi says of the natives of Brazil that they are subject to fewer diseases than the European, and reach an age of from 100 to 120, or even 140 years.

A Girl's Essay on Boys.

At a recent school board examination for girls one of the tasks was an essay on boys, and this was one of the compositions, just as it was handed in, by a girl of 12.

"The boy is not an animal, yet they can be heard to a considerable distance. When a boy hollers he opens his big mouth like frogs, but girls hold their toung til they are spoke to and then they answer respectable and tell just how it was. A boy thinks himself clever because he can wade where it is deep, but God made the dry land for every living thing, and rested on the seventh day. When the boy grows up he is called a husband, and then he stops wading and stays out at nights, but the grew up girl is a widow and keeps house."—London Tit-Bits.

Dirt.

"Mamma," asked a little boy, "what are people made of."

"Dust, my dear."

"Dust is dirt, isn't it?"

"Yes, what you call dirt—the earth—the ground."

"And if animals are not so good as people, perhaps they are not made of as good kind of dirt, mamma?"

"Perhaps not," she said.

"There is different kinds of dirt," he went on. "Some kinds of dirt shake off, and some kinds stick. I think some kinds of dirt is clean, mamma."

"Perhaps so, Willie."

Willie heaved a sigh. The subject was getting deep.

"Well, what is dirt made of?" he asked.—Harper's Young People.

Between Two Dangers.

Freddie Gray and his Aunt Helen, who was visiting the Grays at their summer home, were one day crossing a pasture together. When they were half-way across, the lady noticed two oxen and paused doubtfully.

"I don't know about going past those oxen, Freddie," she said.

Freddie tightened his hold on her hand encouragingly.

"Don't be afraid of them, Aunt Helen," he said; "they won't hurt us. The first time I came down here I was afraid of them. I didn't dare to go behind them, and I didn't dare to go in front of them, and I didn't want to go back and never go through the pasture at all. So I thought of a way to get by"—and the three-year-old sage looked brightly up into Aunt Helen's face—"I just crawled under them."—Youth's Companion.

Real Friends.

You may have heard your mother tell how, when she went to school, she had such a dear girl friend, and how they two have kept up the friendliness for many long years, and you have perhaps heard her say that school friendships are often the most enduring of any. Then you have wondered if you and your present "best friend" will love each other when both of you are gray-headed. Now let us see how things stand between you and your best friend Anna. Of course you like her very much, but you must confess that very frequently there comes a little "tiff," and you "fall out." When such a thing happens you straightway transplant your affections to some other girl, and your friend does likewise. You two scarcely speak when you meet, and generally make a point of showing great devotion to the new friend in the presence of the old one.

Now isn't it rather silly to have these unhappy differences so frequently? If Anna does some very unworthy act, then she deserves the loss of your friendship; but is your regard so frail a thing that it cannot stand small differences of opinion? Cannot you be more generous?

If your friend is lovable and you are the kind of a girl you ought to be, then you will bear with her inconsistencies and put up with some of her faults. Perhaps you are not quite perfect yourself, and she may have to bear some things from you. If your friendship is the real thing, you will remember that love "hopeth all things," "beareth all things," and so bearing many things patiently and sweetly, you will find that years will not weaken, but will rather strengthen your mutual bond of intercourse.—Harper's Young People.

The Typewriter's Trials.

"Are you Miss Plunkins, the new stenographer?" asked Mr. Cumrox.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, put this in a letter: Smith & Co., Wauseoghenoc, Me. Sirs—The last consignment of yours was all out of gear. There wasn't nothing in it we could use. It was the all-firedest lot of stuff I ever set eyes on," he continued, growing excited. "Why, I tell you, Miss Plunkins, some of it was positively goshawful.

"It was moth eaten, and we had to disappoint old-timers in our trade just because those jays didn't come up to the scratch and do business. What I want to know is what they're goin' to do about it," and he paused for breath. He thought a moment and said: "Got all that?"

"Y-yes," replied the young woman, rather doubtfully.

"Well, fix it up and put 'Yours respectfully' after it and let me see it."

And yet people seem surprised when stenographers lose their minds.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....DECEMBER 15, 1892.

THE territory of New Mexico went democratic by 579 majority.

A bill has been offered in congress, to reduce letter postage to one cent.

Montana will have a life size statue in silver, at the World's fair, worth $35,000.

LOUIS KOSSUTH, the great Hungarian patriot, is still in good health at 90. He lives at Turin, Italy.

HARRISON got one elector in Kansas, by a technicality. Weaver got the other nine.

DIAZ again became president of Mexico, Thursday, Dec. 1. This is his fourth term.

THE cabin in which the real Uncle Tom lived, is to be brought from Louisiana to the World's Fair.

CANADA is discussing annexation, the party in favor of it seeming to gain ground, though still weak in numbers.

WONDERFUL gold mines, have been found in the east part of Ontario, Canada, it is claimed. They are said to be the richest ever found.

The oldest school house in Indiana is said to be the old log cabin now standing in the city of Richmond, Wayne county. It was built in 1810.

IN IDAHO, a mine of fine stones, believed to be diamonds, has been discovered. Claimed to resemble the famous Kimberly diamond mines in South Africa.

JUDGE BYRON K. ELLIOTT got the highest number of votes on the republican ticket in this state. Judge McBride stood next, being only 74 votes behind Elliott.

UNDER the Sherman silver bill we have been buying 4,500,000 ounces of silver each month. Very little of this is coined, however, but paper silver certificates are are issued instead.

ANTHRACITE, or hard coal, has been found in Hamilton county, this state. We believe it has not been found in paying quantities anywhere outside of a small part of Pennsylvania.

THE Indiana school text book law must stand. The people don't ask its repeal. Only those who want to open the gates to a flood of school book agents again, dislike the law.

THE INDIANIAN says two-thirds of the votes thrown out for not being properly stamped, were republicans. If true, this proves that democrats are more intelligent than republicans.

OHIO gave Cleveland one elector after all, as we reported some weeks ago. He was the first on the list, and got more than those on the ticket with him through mistakes in stamping.

THE Press quotes "McKinley's brave words," that their cause, protection, was "just." It takes nerve for a man, otherwise honest, to call a plan "just," that takes money from consumers and never pretends to give them a thing for it.

THE latest dig at democrats, is that quite a number lost their lives firing cannon at jollifications. Several republican papers make a great ado about this. A democratic voter, dead or alive, sound or maimed, does not seem to suit them.

FOSTER, secretary of the treasury, in his report, admits "the surplus will be small," and advises that plans be considered "to raise more revenue." And yet republican editors keep saying that the low state of the treasury is only a democratic lie.

A BILL has been introduced in the senate, by Senator Hill, to repeal the Sherman Silver act now in force. It is believed that Sherman himself will favor the repeal. A bill in the House favors the repeal of the odious law under which U. S. marshals and supervisors are appointed.

WEAVER gets another vote in North Dakota, making him two from that state, so he has 23 in all. This second elector, by the revised official count, has a plurality of 14 over his opponent, who has so far been reported as being elected. The other Weaver elector got 214 majority, while the one Harrison elector got only 8.

NEARLY every republican paper is quoting, with a good deal of satisfaction from the Indianapolis Journal, that the vote in Indiana shows that Cleveland, though he had a plurality of over 6,000, still did not have as many votes as all other parties taken together, and add, "he had a majority of the votes of the state against him." This they seem to think was terribly bad on Cleveland. But we presume they do not know that it was the same on Harrison, in nearly every state he carried, if we except Pennsylvania. And to carry this into the entire nation, we find that every republican president, beginning with Lincoln, had more votes against him than for him, excepting Grant. And he did not receive half the votes in the country. And only four years ago, Harrison did not have as many votes as Cleveland alone, by 98,000. And when these same papers claim that 10,000 votes were rejected, and that 7,000 of these were republicans, it dont speak well for that party's intelligence.

Stockholders' Meeting.

The regular annual meeting of the N. E. Ind. Agricultural Association will be held in Waterloo on Thursday, Dec. 29, for the election of officers, hearing reports and such other business as may come up. Directors' meeting in the forenoon at 10. Every stockholder should attend.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

On December 24, 25, 26 and 31, 1892, and January 1 and 2, 1893, the L. S. & M. S. road will sell reduced rate tickets between all points on its line. Tickets will be good going date of sale and for return until January 3rd, 1893.

Thieves Caught.

There has been a wholesale jugging at Ralston's county hotel this week. Evert VanAuken who has been in the sheriff's custody a week or two on charge of breaking into Nill's grocery, concluded to give the crowd away. The result has been the arrest of Theodore Robbins, Richard Brown, Clyde Myers, Wm. Mixon. Myers and Robbins were taken on Tuesday and the others the day before. Robbins it was claimed, had gone to Waterloo to haul over here the goods they had taken from Boyer & Less last week and which later, were sold over the county. Yesterday they were brought before Squire Walborn for examination. Young Brown was dismissed, as there appeared no evidence against him. Mixon and Myers waived examination and returned to jail, and Robbins is out on bail. Dan Hensinger was named as a member of the gang, but is said to be already in jail at Ft. Wayne, for taking some wheat from some Allen county farmer. This is the set of burglars that have been making raids here and at Waterloo. They have got into the L. S. depot several times, Hidy's restaurant, Nill's grocery and several other places.

Obituary.

Clarissa Draggoo wife of Geo. W. Reed was born in Ashland county, Ohio, May 14, 1821, departed this life Dec. 9, 1892, aged 71 years, 6 months, 25 days. She was married to Geo. W. Reed, April 15, 1842. To them were born 3 children, 2 of whom preceded her to the Spirit world. They remained in Ashland Co., for years after their marriage, after which they moved to what is now called Concord in this county. Here they lived for some time and then moved to what is now known as Union Chapel, six miles east of Auburn. Last August they moved to Auburn where they lived until her death. They enjoyed married life a little over 50 years. In 1845 she became a christian and maintained her faith until her death; she lived a christian life nearly 48 years. The last year of her life was one of suffering but she bore it all with patience and christian fortitude. Her life ebbed away like the setting of the sun after a stormy day, and closed the history of her life with the beautiful words "Now Lord Jesus, receive me." She leaves a husband, one son, two brothers and one sister to mourn her loss. The funeral services were conducted from the Lutheran church, Dec. 11, at 2 p. m., the interment being in Evergreen cemetery, J. D. Brosy officiating.

The Tramp Got It.

H. C. Shull enjoys a joke even if it is on himself. Last Friday morning a forlorn looking tramp presented himself at Mr. Shull's residence, with the usual request, for he was hungry and cold. He was given a good breakfast, and then furnished work to pay for it. It also happened, that about this time, the butcher from the South End meat market, came up and wanted to buy a fine, fat veal that Mr. Shull had concluded to kill for his own use, and he had called Gus. Stutz down there to kill it for him. But the butcher wanted the veal, badly, and finally Mr. Shull agreed to let him have a half of it. The butcher was to kill it and bring back half, and also the cash for the other half. This the butcher did, sending up his helper. Mr. Shull by this time was away, and the butcher delivered the meat to the tramp who was still at work. He also asked for Mr. Shull saying he wished to pay him for the other half of the veal. The tramp informed him that Mr. Shull was absent, but as he, the tramp had been working for Mr. Shull about two years, he could leave the money with him. This looked all right, and the butcher gave him the money to hand to Mr. Shull, and then went away. The next person to go away was the tramp. He did not stay on the order of his going, either, and he has not been seen since. There is one good feature to this matter, and that is, that there is one tramp in the world, that Mr. Shull's family can feel sure, they will never have to feed again.

W. A. Moody, publisher of the late departed "Hoosier Tidings," the people's party paper, recently published at Kendalville, is reported to have sunk $1,000 on that wild venture. It is also said he has had to go to work as a common laborer. He is a native of Newville township, in this county and well known there, being a son of the late Dwight Moody. We are sorry he lost his money, but we presume he does not feel above hard work—at least he should not. People will learn after a while that a newspaper will not pay unless all things are favorable. Look at the recent fiasco in Waterloo, with the "Advocate." A good many of our farmers lost a dollar or a half dollar on that. But in the face of all this, a number of over zealous members of the new party, wanted to start it up again. But they seem to have taken a second thought. A letter from Geo. W. Slentz, now at Jamesport, Mo., orders the COURIER to his address, and wants to hear from old DeKalb. How the boys do get scattered over the country.

And now comes E. T. Hull, and reports a young democrat just arrived at their house. We send congratulations to both happy parents, and hope the young chap may become as solid a democrat as Grover Cleveland.

J. N. Boyle of Butler, was over here Tuesday. He is still in the real estate business, buying and selling, and doing all business in that line, Parties who have property they wish handled, would do well to give him a chance.

When you decide on what you want to read the coming year and would like to make a present of the same to some friend or relative, please call at the City News Stand, where you will always find a large assortment of the latest periodicals. tf

Mr. J. C. Boswell, one of best known and most respected citizens of Brownwood, Texas, suffered with diarrhea for a long time and tried many different remedies without benefit, until Chamberlain's colic, cholera and diarrhea remedy was used; that relieved him at once. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Ashley Times:—Frank Seiler has opened an insurance, real estate and loan office in Ashley, officing for the present with Dr. Burgess. Mr. Seiler makes a specialty of the Union central Life Insurance company, which is one of the best companies doing business in the state, having the most equitable plans and rates. Mr. Seiler is a hustler and perfectly reliadle. Will be in his office Saturday.

Dr. A. B. Leonard, who is missioniary secretary of the M. E. church, for the United States will lecture at the M. E. church here this Thursday evening, Dec. 15. The lecture will be free, and it is hoped there will be a large attendance. Also the same afternoon there will be a missionary convention at the same church, at which a number of missionaries will be present. These meetings will be very interesting.

Jotham Woolsey, a well known former resident of DeKalb, is in the county now, on an extended visit. He is still at Straubville, in Sargeant county, North Dakota. He left there on Tuesday of last week. The family are generally prospering. His son, Solon, is teaching, as is also his sister, Clarinda. She is besides, the owner of a half section of good land, which she took under the entry laws of Uncle Sam. He also brings the sad news of the death there of Henry Straub, his brother-in-law, who died Dec. 5. Mr. Straub was a brother of the music teacher and author, S. W. Straub, and father of W. L. Straub, editor of the Cogswell, North Dakota, Bustler. Mr Woolsey may remain here till spring. If so, his wife will probably join him here.

There was an error in our report of the stabbing affair between Treesh and Wetzel, in last week's paper. Wetzel, we are informed, never paid any notes for Treesh, and hence that was not a part of the trouble. The affray took place in Treesh's door yard, in Sedan, and not at Wetzel's as we had it. It is sometimes difficult to get a straight account of these things, and hence, erroneous accounts come out.

Cory Shugers has received a new kind of "green goods" letter. This one, instead of offering to furnish counterfeit bills "that connot be distinguished from the genuine," offers duplicate bonds, etc, as well as paper money. It claims it can furnish "new two-dollar bills, the same as used by republican committees in several campaigns." It claims that these $2 bills were duplicated for use in the campaigns, and are still in use, several sets of them. Of course Cory did not bite.

It is surprising, yet very pleasing to note how energetically our business men have been selecting nice things, both ornamental and useful, for the holidays. They have seemingly exercised the greatest possible care in purchasing just what old and young, high and low, learned and unlearned, could wish, as bright gifts for their friends, on that joyous occasion called CHRISTMAS. There is hardly a thing the mind can conceive or the heart wish for, that is not on display in the various shop windows, and at prices too, which harmonize admirably.

TWENTY New York millionaires are ready to build summer homes in Vermont if the poor farmers will promise to build good roads and to keep them in fair condition.

AS SOON as the telephone line was opened between the two cities, New York talked to Chicago, and, as usual, Chicago talked back. But the back-talk was pleasanter than it generally is.

THE Khan of Khiva is to visit London during the coming summer. Chicago should lay out a well-baited hook to get him over here. The Fair will need something like a real live khan to overawe the woman managers.

THE longest word in the new Century dictionary is palatopharingealaryngeal. The next longest is transubstantiationalist. What a distinguished individual the palatopharingealaryngeal transubstantiationalist must be.

THE famous Lady Brooke, of Eaton Lodge, is busy with her pleasant fad for a Shakspeare garden, but though she may find it easy to get a box for the opera, she will have trouble in getting the box fences and greenwood statuary which were characteristic of Shakspeare's time.

JAY GOULD is taking life easy, leaving all the cares of business to his two sons, George and Edward, and merely standing around to see that they do not run off the track or be too free with the watering can when stocks need attending to.

JUST as the hoards of the miser are of far less value than the money that is freely circulated and widely employed, so the time that is hoarded up and exclusively devoted to a single object is less productive than that which is intelligently and generously apportioned out to meet the varied needs of human welfare.

RAILWAY men ought to know without being told that "there's millions in it" to them with cheap fares during the World's Fair. They can make a success of it, both for the people and themselves. They can defeat its success and defeat themselves. The sooner the gougers begin to get such facts through their craniums the better.

KAISER WILHELM wants the army of Germany to be increased, alleging that a big display of force by the Fatherland is necessary to preserve the peace of Europe. The Kaiser has never as yet had the pleasure of smelling hostile powder, and his unintermittent assertion of himself as the German "war lord" is about as ridiculous as the "piff, paff, pouff" of the redoubtable Gen. Boum.

A MAN in Oklahoma picked up a venomous snake the other day, believing that his religious faith would save him from harm. He was imitating the example of Paul at Melita, but the simplicity of the two cases ceased with their inception. Paul came off scot-free, but the Oklahomaite passed in his checks in the course of a few hours. Somehow or other faith doesn't seem to do such good miraculous work now as it is credited with having done a couple of thousand years ago.

THE Boston Globe is of opinion that the Chicago University students who engage in chair-pushing at the World's Fair will not realize much in the way of tips, as women will be their principal customers, and the fair sex is noted for its economy in the bestowal of gratuities. The Globe ignores entirely the consideration of gallantry. The women who are wheeled may not be heavy producers in the way of cash, but just think of the smiles they will shed upon the good-looking propellers of their jinrikishas!

THE German Empress, though originally a poor princess, is now very extravagant in the way of clothes, seldom giving a gown more than one wear. And like many extravagant individuals, she flourishes at the expense of others. A Berlin firm of costumers which she had patronized liberally went to the wall recently because it couldn't get her Majesty to pony up what she owed the establishment. It seems that empresses have traits of character similar to those of ladies who have never reached the imperial dignity. One touch of nature makes all women kin.

IT is well known that the tails of comets stream away from the sun, and are of very low density. Various hypotheses have been propounded to explain their movement away from the sun, but the most promising is that of a Russian physicist, who ascribes it to the repulsion of the solar radiation acting on a mass of extreme tenuity, while, on the other hand, the attraction of gravitation operates between the solar mass and the solid nucleus of the comet. The same physicist accounts for the mysterious terrestrial phenomenon of the zodiacal light in the same way. He believes that the earth has also a tail of cosmic dust, not luminous of itself, but by reflecting the sunlight.

THERE is great grumbling among the real horsey people of New York over the recent equine exhibition in that city. It appears that the show was dominated by the Vanderbilt family, who made an intensely exclusive affair of it, put prices of boxes up to rates prohibitive to all but multimillionaires, and took all the prizes with alleged inferior entries. The Vanderbilts belong to the new rich, and the new rich who have got there are generally the most demonstratively autocratic of all autocrats. The present generation of the family doesn't know near as much about horses as did their plebian grandfather, the Commodore, but they have distanced the old man as regards position in four hundredism.

IN this age of stupendous achievements one stupendous failure stands out conspicuous and solitary. Time and space have been annihilated by the genius of man, as shown by the devices of steam and electricity. Continents have been moored side by side by the cable. Through the instrumentality of the telephone Chicago can listen to the music of a brass band playing in New York. It is but a week's journey from Chicago to Paris. India has been brought several months nearer England by the Suez canal. All this and much more that is almost wonderful has been accomplished—but the Isthmus of Panama is still unbisected by an artificial waterway. Here is the one grand, stupendous failure of the age—the Panama canal.

THE best way to ventilate a house is by means of open fires. However, open fires are not sufficiently warm in winter, and there are few houses that are provided with the ideal heating arrangement of modified steam heat with grates. Lacking this, and, indeed, under any circumstances, a sleeping room or sitting room should be, so to put it, washed out with pure air every day. Whatever the temperature outside, every window should be opened and the outer air allowed to pour through it from ten to twenty minutes each day. As a rule rooms are kept too warm. No room should be kept heated beyond a temperature of 68 degrees. The system of a person living in a superheated atmosphere becomes so vitiated that he shivers at the slightest change and takes cold on the least provocation.

JUST at the time that the reappearance of cholera at various points in Europe is announced comes the story that thousands of bales of rags, collected in Germany, France, Holland and Belgium, are now on their way across seas, and that their owners expect presently to disembark them at one of our principal ports—very probably the good city of New York. Not one pound of this suspicious merchandise should be permitted to land nor should the ships bearing it be allowed to enter our seaports. No more dangerous vehicle for the propagation of cholera is known than the bale of rags, which cannot be disinfected so that the disease germs are eradicated from it. The story goes that many of the rags come from Hamburg. If this be true the people who shipped such perilous merchandise this way should be held to strict account. A cargo which jeopardizes the lives of millions of human beings is a risky thing to own.

IT is characteristic of American methods that the recent violent cholera scare has been followed by a period of indifference and apathy on the subject. Scarcely two months ago most of the cities and towns in the North were quarantining against New York and one another. Boards of Health were in a state of ferment, and municipal authorities were inaugurating all sorts of hygienic reforms. Now, nothing whatever is being done. The subsidence of cholera in New York harbor, due to cool weather, has been followed by a complete suspension of all efforts to avert the disease or to fight it when it comes. This is worse than the folly of locking the stable-door after the horse is stolen; it is leaving the door open and expecting the thief not to enter. Meanwhile cases of cholera have appeared in France, Holland, and Austria, and that the disease is increasing at St. Petersburg. There is hardly a doubt that it will maintain a foothold in Europe during the winter and break out again next spring. It is but a step from Europe to our shores, and it will be very unwise to depend on another spasm of quarantining to keep cholera out next summer. Our sanitary and municipal authorities ought not to be idle during the next few months. They should not wait till cholera is knocking at the door, ready to utilize favorable conditions for the propagation of the disease.

Exquisite Oscar.

Mr. Wilde says he is a journalist, and modestly observes: "I am told that my judgment as an art and dramatic critic is considered final." This is almost equal, says the Albany Times, to Oscar's remark to a London friend who visited him in Paris. "Did you drop in at my chambers before you left London?" inquired the æsthete. "I did," was the reply. "Did you observe whether my lily was in flower?" The friend answered that it was. "How good of it to bloom while I am away!" murmured Oscar, gently.

Our Mixed-Up Language.

The very fact that our language is a potpourri, says the Boston Globe, explains why foreigners find it so hard to learn. There is a story told at the expense of a German lady teacher at Wellesley College. One very cold day she came into the dining-room for the five-o'clock dinner, and one of the young ladies remarked: "How cold it is to-day!" "Yes," replied the teacher, "it has been so cold in my room that I had to sit all the afternoon with my feet on the transom." Radiator she meant.

PROTECTION MUST GO.

DEMOCRATS SHOULD NOT HESITATE IN THEIR DUTY.

If the Party Shall Keep Faith with the People It Will Hold Its Allies in the Northwest—The Protected Coal Barons.

Cleveland Will Do the Work.

No intelligent, unprejudiced observer of current political conditions and events has any doubt as to the cause which operated to produce the recent Democratic victory in the Northwest. Such an observer is able to account readily and confidently for the Democratic majorities in Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin; for the Republican losses in Minnesota and Nebraska, and for the political revolutions in Kansas and North Dakota. He knows that all these things are the result of popular opposition to the thieving protective tariff system.

Moreover, the free traders and the tariff reformers in the Northwest supported the Democratic ticket at the last election because they believed the Democratic party to be sincere in its professions favoring tariff reform. They looked upon Grover Cleveland as being the greatest living representative of the principle that all tariffs should be levied only for revenue. Thus finding the Democratic candidates and the Democratic platform in harmony with their own views respecting the tariff, they voted for the Chicago nominees in most of the States, while in others they supported Weaver and Field as the best method of contributing to the election of Cleveland and Stevenson.

The effect of the political changes in the Northwest was to make certain the success of the Democratic Presidential ticket, no matter if the electoral vote of New York had been given to the Republican candidates. Had there been any doubt of the earnestness of the Democratic purpose this revolution would not have occurred. The voters accepted as honest the declaration of the Chicago convention. They heard with delight the ringing words of Mr. Cleveland in accepting his nomination at the Madison Square meeting in New York.

The people of the Northwest not only believed in the sincerity of the Democratic promises of reform, but they believed that with the triumph of Democratic principles at the election reform would not be delayed beyond the earliest possible moment at which it could be accomplished. They have commissioned the Democracy with power to correct certain evils and abuses from which they have suffered and still suffer. More than this they cannot do. They leave the destiny of the Democratic party in the hands of its own managers. One thing only is certain. If the Democracy shall keep faith with the people it will hold its allies in the Northwest; if it fails it will lose them. There must be neither hesitation nor delay on the part of the Democratic leaders. Protectionism must go.

Take the Duty Off of Sugar!

If there is one duty in the McKinley bill that is more of a curse than any other, it is the duly of ½ cent per pound on refined sugars. It produces almost no revenue at all, but puts about $20,000,000 a year into the pockets of the Sugar Trust. If there were any doubt that the industry of refining sugar would not remain in this country without such Government aid, there would be an excuse, from a protection point of view, for this duty. But there is none. Sugar is refined as cheaply here as anywhere on this earth. H. O. Havemeyer testified to this fact several years ago. The only excuse the Republicans had for leaving this duty, was that it would give them an opportunity to fry fat out of the Sugar Trust—an opportunity that was utilized during the last campaign to the extent of $100,000 or $200,000.

The Sugar Trust, the sole beneficiary of the sugar duty, has an unusually unsavory record.

To gain complete control of the refining business in this country, it has purchased refineries at three or four times their cost, only to close them up to restrict production. A few months after it was formed, in November, 1887, but ten of the twenty original refineries in the trust were in operation.

It has reduced wages in refineries to $1 per day for common labor. No Americans will work in the intensely heated rooms at these wages; hence their places have been filled by Hungarians, Poles and Italians.

It makes use of the rebate system to kill its competitors. By this system, large wholesale grocers who bought only from the trust, obtained special prices.

It has since it gained complete control of the refining business last winter, depressed the price of raw while it has advanced the price of refined sugars, as is shown by the following table.

	96 deg. Centrifugals. Cts. per lb.	Granulated. Cts. per lb.	Difference. Cts.
Dec. 31, 1891	3⅜	4	⅝
April 11, 1892	3⅛	4⅜	1¼
May 25, 1892	3 1-16	4⅜	1 5-16
Nov. 28, 1892	3 3-16	4 11-16	1½

The cost of refining is less than ⅛ cent per pound. As the per capita consumption of sugar in the United States is about seventy pounds, each difference of 1-16 of a cent between the price of raw and of refined sugar extorts about $2,500,000 from the pockets of the people and puts it into the pockets of the trust. Without any duty the trust would be making about $30,000,000 a year clear profit (nearly 100 per cent.). With the duty it can and does raise prices ½ cent higher and adds $20,000,000 to its already enormous profits.

If the duty of ½ cent per pound were levied upon raw instead of on refined sugar it would produce about $15,000,000 a year revenue and would encourage sugar growing in the South. The people would pay the same for sugar as now, but only a small portion would go to the trust. This would be far preferable to the present duty. But the people want entirely free sugar, and they will not be content till they get it.

Coal Is Protected 75 Cents Per Ton.

Should coal be discovered opposite Detroit or Buffalo in such vast quantities that it could be furnished to manufacturers for 3 cents per bushel, the owners of coal mines in the United States would ask, doubtless, for an artificial obstacle (there being no natural one) between these cities, and this great store of wealth, sufficient to prevent its being used. But how ridiculous such an enactment would appear to common sense and to a business instinct. The establishment of such an obstacle would seem to exhibit an intelligence no greater than would the passage of a law prohibiting the introduction of the light of the sun into dwellings, that our electric plants might extend their field of operations; or, of a law prohibiting the importation of tropical fruits, that the hot-house gardeners might cater to a larger trade.—T. M. Gilmore, in St. Louis Courier.

Unanswered Questions.

Perhaps some of the big Republicans can now find time to answer the following questions. They are some of those prepared by Mr. D. Webster Croh, President of the Chicago Question Club, and fired from all points of the compass at McKinley, Sherman, and the other tax-yourself-into-prosperity professors. If they will now give satisfactory answers, they will be forgiven for neglecting to do so in the rush before election, when the salvation of the nation was at stake and all protectionists were engaged in repelling the threatened invasion of pauper labor, pauper-made goods, and Cobden Club gold:

Would Carnegie and other shrewd protectionists desire a tariff, if it cheapened what they sell—goods—and made dearer what the buy—labor?

Why more laboriously make tinplate itself instead of its cheaper exchangeable equivalent? If toil itself is more desirable than its fruits—labor products—why not destroy all labor-saving tools and machinery?

If the tariff is no tax, why refund to exporting manufacturers 99 per cent. of the duty on their imported raw material?

Unless protective tariff enhances domestic prices, why give sugar producers a bounty in lieu of the removed sugar duties?

If a tariff on articles cheapens them, should it not be placed lightest on the finished product and heaviest on raw materials to cheapen them, and thus widen our manufacturers' margin of profit? Why does the McKinley tariff invert this order?

If protective tariff is good, would not prohibitive tariff be still better?

If international trade is economically injurious, is not interstate trade equally hurtful?

Can "trusts" be injurious and the tariff fostering them beneficent?

Can foreign trade be injurious yet shipping subsidies desirable?

Can tariff cheapen an article yet simultaneously raise its producers' wages?

Free Wool Needed at Once.

The strongest argument we have seen from the business man's standpoint in favor of an extra session of Congress is that of Mr. Abraham Mills, which we publish to-day. Mr. Mills is known as a first-class authority in the wool trade. He says that there could not be a more propitious time for the inevitable change in wool duties than the present; whereas every moment of delay will be taken advantage of by the foreign manufacturer to accumulate goods for the American market, with all the profit that the present low price of wool gives him. This low price in foreign markets results largely from the absence of American buyers who are handicapped with duties averaging 50 per cent., and some of them as high as 120 per cent. The longer this discrimination lasts the more goods the foreigner will pile up to be thrown upon our market when the change comes. Therefore the time to make the change is now. If it is made soon, our manufacturers will have an even chance, indeed, much more than an even chance, since even the Mills bill left them more protection than they ever asked for under the regime of free wool. Every day's delay will make it worst for them. If they are wise they will ask their friends in the Senate to pass the Springer bill this winter.—New York Evening Post.

Pearl Button Trust on Deck.

The combination that succeeded in raising the duty on pearl buttons from 25 per cent. to something like 400 per cent. in the McKinley tariff does not seem to have learned much from the recent election. It is stated that the Pearl Button Association has recently met and appointed "a committee to look after legislation at Washington." This committee may as well save its pains and lobby expenses. The next tariff, including the duties on pearl buttons, will be revised in the interest of American consumers, as well as of manufacturers. So there will be no need of sending committees to Washington to instruct the representatives of the people in regard to their duties. The educational campaign has fully developed the truth about this pearl button business, along with the other tariff iniquities.—Philadelphia Record.

All Is Lovely Now.

Now that the election is over and the calamity howlers shut down, New England cotton manufacturers have increased the wages of their operatives, the Carnegie Steel Company starts the last of its idle mills and announces its purpose to increase its plants. The "paralysis and ruin" that were to follow at the chariot wheels of Democracy triumphant are limited to a decline in trust stocks and the seizure of "Prince Rus'" Montana newspaper by the Sheriff.—Louisville Times.

MR. BAYARD says there is no precedent for an extra session to revise the tariff. Neither is there any precedent for the tremendous expression of public opinion against the tariff that recently occurred. It is time to make new precedents throughout.—St. Louis Courier.

A FEMALE temperance lecturer visited Valdosta, Ga., the other day. She published a pamphlet setting forth the horrible effects of intemperance, and exemplified them in person by getting on a rousing drunk.

SOME of the cottonwood telegraph poles used in Nevada chanced to be sunk in marshy places with the bark on. They have taken root, and display attractive foliage.

NEW YORK'S NEXT MAYOR.

Thomas F. Gilroy from Being a Printer's Devil Rose to His Present Position.

Thomas F. Gilroy's popularity and reputation for sterling worth, quite independent of the power of Tammany Hall's masterly organization, were sufficient to insure his election to the Mayoralty of the nation's metropolis.

Mr. Gilroy was born in Ireland in 1840 and came to this country with his parents five years later. He was educated at the public schools and at the free academy in New York. At the age of 16 he left the academy to learn typesetting, and worked at his trade until he was 22 years of age, when he became identified with Tammany Hall and was appointed a clerk in the Supreme Court Chambers. From that time on he has been an active participant in New York City politics.

Mr. Gilroy was one of John Kelly's right-hand men at the time of Tammany's revolt against Governor Robinson, was for many years the chief working Secretary of the Tammany organization, has long been a district leader, and on May 18, 1891, was elected Grand Sachem of Tammany Hall. He is clear-headed, vigorous, determined, and by many has been regarded as the brains of Tammany Hall.

PALESTINE'S FIRST RAILROAD.

Conducted in a Businesslike Way and Showing Prospects of Paying Well.

"Jaffa and Jerusalem through line!" does sound like a burlesque, doesn't it? And all the humorists have tried their hand at inventing cries for the brakeman, such as "Golgotha Station—twenty minutes for refreshments!" "Capernaum Junction—all out for turnpike to Mount of Olives!" Just the same, the road is completed, and was opened with great ceremony, the Governor of Jerusalem, Ibrahim Hakki Pasha, and the Sultan's special envoy, Djela Pasha, being prominent figures. The New York Advertiser would as easily conceive of Pontius Pilate presiding at the dedication of a cotton mill. Jaffa (pronounced Yahfa) is the seaport nearly straight west of Jerusalem, and two trains leave there daily for Jerusalem, making the run in three hours and a half. The terminal station is on the opposite side of the valley of Hinnom from Jerusalem, so there is an omnibus ride of half a mile thence to the Jaffa gate. Good French hotels are at Jaffa and Jerusalem, and the trip can be made in great comfort. The French company owning this road is running it as a pure matter of business, and the prospects are that it will pay.

Long-Winded Fogies.

"The Scythians," said Sydney Smith, "ate their grandparents when they became troublesome and told long stories." Who knows whether the Eumedidas may not suffer a remnant of these useful Scythians to survive even unto our day, to be a terror to long-winded fogies, male and female.

I met at dinner recently an old fogy who I am sure has his Scythian waiting for him. He had been harrying the company with stupid remarks about natural history, asking questions, too, that would turn the stomach of a school inspector. At length, in that peculiar tone of voice in which theological questions are uttered in the pulpit, our fogy said: "Has an oyster brains?" "Certainly," replied our host, "for an oyster knows when to shut up."

This reminds me of another repartee. I did not hear it myself; I wish I had for, in years past I often met the hero of the story, Mr. Bonamy Price, and could well appreciate his peculiar power of leadership in talk, a power suggestive of the sound of Scotch bagpipes over and above other musical instruments. On this occasion the leader of talk—some wished he were Lieder Ohne Worte—started the subject of the generally prevailing ideas about heaven. After the usual hit at the materialistic view of the Mohammedan, he turned to an American gentleman at the table and asked what were his notions on the subject? The Yankee, with his slow, nasal accent and cool manner, commanding attention, replied: "Wa-al, my notion of heaven is that of a quiet, green place, without money and without price."—Tempel Bar.

ONE great drawback to our national election system is the fool bets to be paid after the contest is decided.

Your Health.

The citadel of life must be guarded at two points. In the first place there is the danger of taking cold. We take cold through the skin and this affects the kidneys and the lungs. So intimately are these organs connected, that a cold affects both. In order to relieve the system, both should be treated, or rather, the whole system should be regulated. This is done by REID'S GERMAN COUGH AND KIDNEY CURE. It acts as a stimulant and restores the organs to action. The other weak spot is the digestion. When the food does not digest, it accumulates and causes fever, sickness and death. The Laxative Gum Drops will remove all waste material from the system and do it without griping or pain. Ask your druggist for these remedies and see that he gives them to you.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.

CONGRESS HAS BEEN SPECIALLY CONVENED TEN TIMES.

Mr. Cleveland Gets 1,500 Letters a Day—The First Assistant Postmaster General and His Ax—He Controls 226,000 Places—People Who Want Offices.

Extra Sessions.

Washington correspondence:

Ever since the election the question of a special session of Congress has been the one topic of discussion on the Democratic side of the political fence, to the exclusion almost of probable members of Cleveland's cabinet. The President-elect himself is, of course, the only man who can tell with certainty now whether a special session will be convened; that is, if he has made up his mind on the subject. Everybody knows that opinions differ as to the advisability of calling Congressmen together before the usual time, a year hence, while some in favor of the scheme want the opening postponed until October, 1893. But whether an extra session is called or not, and no matter at what particular period of the coming year, the reason for so doing in case of a special convocation will certainly be the revision of existing tariff laws.

Undoubtedly the McKinley bill will come in for the first round share of attention. In any event the gathering is bound to be attended with more than the usual degree of political interest.

Mr. Cleveland's proclamation, if he issues one, will be the eleventh of such a nature, and Mr. Harrison's successor at the White House will be the ninth chief executive to avail himself of the privilege of calling Congress to meet at the Capitol before the first Monday of December. A review of the Congressional Record shows that two Presidents—Madison and Hayes—convened special sessions twice each during their administrations, and since the latter's term none have taken place. Four of the ten on file had as their object some ultimate legislation relating to wars already inaugurated or in immediate prospect, and one, that called by Jefferson, was decided upon to avert any threatened complications arising over the purchase of Louisiana from the French, with Spain frowning upon the deal.

The special session fathered by John Adams in 1797 probably precluded warfare with France through the active hostile preparations then authorized against the "tri-color" republic, but only two had any bearing upon the financial condition of the country. These were called by Van Buren and "Tippecanoe" Harrison, and some of the treasury laws then passed are still recognized methods of handling currency. If Mr. Cleveland listens to the plea of the ultra tariff reformers and proclaims in their direction next spring, the extra session then called will be the third in the history of the United States, which may possibly consider public financial matters per se, providing, of course, the free silver business and Senator Peffer's new sub-treasury idea are left untouched.

Barring the long jump from 1813 to 1837, extra sessions have been regularly convened at intervals of from six to fifteen years, but the last on record occurred in 1879, the middle of Hayes' administration, and since then the Congressional law has been "long term, short term and no specials," so that the list up to date covers a period of eighty-three years, from 1797 to 1879, and the filibustering which made the latter a necessity shows how the political Darwinian theory had worked its evolution since the statesmen of three-fourths of a century before legislated upon giving the French a dose of retaliative medicine.

A resume of the ten sessions called by Presidents since John Adams' time points out the fact that three were convened by order of Republican party upholders, the one of Lincoln and the two during Hayes' term filling that side of the roster. If Mr. Cleveland puts himself on record for number 11, the session will more than equal in financial interest those called by Van Buren and "Old Tippecanoe," while presenting a contrast to that in Madison's first term, which had a sort of tariff tinge, because commercial relations with England and France were forbidden altogether.

Mr. Cleveland's Mail.

From now until his inauguration Mr. Cleveland's mail, notwithstanding his recently uttered protest, will certainly average at least 1,500 letters daily. That was about the number President Harrison received from immediately after his election, and it jumped to 2,000 per diem after his arrival at the White House. About nine-tenths of all such communications are from office-seekers. The rest mostly convey advice and suggestions, offer congratulations, and give warnings, friendly and otherwise. "Better wear a shirt of mail," wrote one timid citizen to the present chief executive four years ago, while another gave notice of the subscriber's intention to blow him up with dynamite. As is customary with them at such times, cranks of all kinds in every part of the country are now "taking pen in hand" to address the President-elect by post. No wonder he wants to seclude himself from the world until March 4.

Whenever a change of administration occurs a sort of fever for office seeking becomes epidemic among the people. For months after Mr. Cleveland comes in the time of his private secretary will be chiefly occupied with receiving applications for places under the Government, and the ante-room at the White House will be crowded at all hours with Congressmen and others eager to secure plums of patronage. The "very hungry and very thirsty" will swarm upon Washington like grasshoppers upon a green vegetable patch, and the "swish" of the decapitating ax wielded by Mr. Clarkson's successor will be continually heard in the Post Office Department.

The First Assistant Postmaster General is conspicuously the man of awe and dread when a change of administration has come about. He disposes as he chooses of nearly all of the 230,000 offices in the Postoffice Department, which has ten times the patronage of all the other departments of the Government put together. All of these, except about 600 clerks in the classified service and 3,200 Presidential postmasters, he controls, chopping off heads and filling places according to his fancy. He holds in the hollow of his hand 65,000 postoffices. However, 25,000 of these yield less than $100 of salary yearly, and the incumbents in most cases will not find the loss of their positions a great misfortune. Already the Postoffice Department is receiving scores of letters daily from such fourth-class postmasters, who are anxious to resign. One of them writes: "If I give up my postoffice plant for $1,000 to a Democrat, will you appoint him and will you guarantee the security of his situation during the coming four years?" While wielding the ax Mr. Clarkson's successor will make his appointments usually in obedience to the wishes expressed by Congressmen as to the distribution of the patronage in their respective districts.

With the coming in of the new administration the swarm of office-seekers will arrive in Washington. All of them will reach here in high confidence of getting places under the Government, and nine-tenths of them will go away disappointed after eating out their hearts with waiting and hope deferred. The great majority of those who do succeed will be obliged to be content with positions much lower in the public service than they had expected to secure. In numerous instances individuals of some distinction who journeyed here with aspirations for posts of high honor and emolument under one administration or another have been glad to get situations finally as messengers in the departments. History in this matter repeats itself every time that one political party goes out and another comes in. Those who fail, as their money runs low, drift out of the hotels into the boarding houses, finally falling back on the free lunch route. Last scene of all, which ends this sad, eventful history, is the appeal addressed by the disappointed office-seeker to his Congressman for a loan to pay car fare home. Undoubtedly these place hunters are mostly people of some importance where they live. But the fever for holding public office attacks them, and they abandon everything else to try for it. When they get it the glamour of the life holds them so that they are never satisfied to abandon it. Even the Congressmen who fail of re-election are eager to get back into employment as clerks in the Legislative halls where once they exercised control over the affairs of the nation.

Capital Chat.

The Supervising Architect in his annual report recommends a special appropriation of $50,000 for general repairs of the United States Custom House at Chicago.

Secretary Noble has accepted the reconveyance to the United States by the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad Company of 45,000 acres of land in the Red River Valley, in North Dakota, under the act of Aug. 5, 1892, and has issued instructions authorizing the railroad company to make indemnity selections therefore of non-mineral unoccupied lands in the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Idaho.

The Democrats are inclined, it is now said, to let the question of the admission of New Mexico and Arizona go over to the next Congress.

Mr. Caldwell, of Ohio, is the author of a bill introduced in the House to reduce postage on first-class mail matter, except postal cards, to 1 cent per half-ounce.

Justice Harlan, of the United States Supreme Court, will sail for Europe as one of the arbitrators in the Behring Sea seal fisheries dispute.

G. M. Lamberton, of Lincoln, Neb., has been selected for appointment as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to succeed Mr. Nettleton.

Mr. Cockrell, of Missouri, will undoubtedly succeed himself in the United States Senate.

Members of the Interstate Commerce Commission look with seriousness upon the decision of Judge Gresham, which limits and to some extent nullifies the power of the commission. They feel that its natural sequel is an abolition of the entire commission.

A request from the Treasury Department urging Subtreasurers of the United States to gather in all $500 notes issued prior to 1850 has created some gossip in financial centers, but at the department nothing is thought of this action.

Speaker Crisp, Representative McMillin, and Representative Catchings, who as members of the rules committee are rather looked to to shape the policy of the House, held a conference of some length in the Speaker's room for the purpose of considering the plan and scope of an inquiry into the condition of the Treasury.

It is not improbable that a caucus of the Democratic members of the House will be called upon to consider the proposition embodied in bills now before the House for the change of the date of the meeting of Congress from the first Monday in December to the first Monday after the 4th day of March of each year.

The bill which passed the Senate authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River above New Orleans proposes a structure of three unbroken spans, the main span to be at least 1,000 feet long and the height of the superstructure above high water to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Shady Churches.

The early meeting-houses of New England were destitute of shade. The trees in the vicinity had been cut down for fear of forest fires, and curtains and window-blinds were unknown.

There was no "dim religious light" within the church, but in summer "the white and undiluted day," and in winter an atmosphere so cold that, as Judge Sewell pathetically records in his diary, "the communion bread was frozen pretty hard, and rattled into the plates."

As years passed on, trees were planted to protect the congregation from the garish sunlight. Sometimes the growth was dense, and cast a somber shadow over the meeting-house that made it so dark within as to annoy the minister.

Two anecdotes, told in "The Sabbath in Puritan New England," illustrate how the clergy protested against these gloomy meeting houses.

A neighboring pastor, preaching in a church thickly shaded by a large tree, gave out the text, "Why do the wicked live?" Peering in the dim light at his manuscript, he exclaimed: "I hope they will live long enough to cut down this great hemlock tree behind the pulpit window!"

Doctor Storrs preached by invitation in a meeting house overshadowed with trees. His struggles to read his manuscript temped him to affirm that he would never preach in that house again while it was so ill-lighted and gloomy.

A few years later he was invited to preach in the same old meeting-house. He rode up to it on the Sunday morning, and seeing the trees still standing, rode away leaving the people to sit in darkness, without a sermon.—Youth's Companion.

THERE are many curious trades in the world, but the most strange must be the "artificial manufacture of wild men." Yet a well-known English doctor in China has just certified from his own personal experience that this art is regularly practiced in the Flowery Kingdom.

ANY vessel causing a disaster at her launch is regarded by the Japanese as doomed to ill-fortune for her whole career. At Osaka lately a vessel capsized while being launched, several persons being drowned. She was destroyed by night with much ceremony.

IN regard to modern languages, it is said that the Chinese is the most difficult. We find this out when we try to explain to our Chinese laundrymen that a pair of socks are missing.—Texas Siftings.

THE Mikado of Japan has no mere floricultural little country to rule over. He is the sovereign of 40,000 people who live in 13,000 towns and villages.

The Prowess of Captain Myles Standish.

The iron hand of the colony in dealing with the Indians, and with evil-doers along the coast, was their intrepid Captain General, Myles Standish, a small man, who was sneeringly dubbed by one who had felt the weight of his authority, "Captain Shrimp." He was agile, indomitable, and hot-tempered. A Yorkshireman of a gentle family, he had been a soldier in the Low Countries, where he fell in with Robinson's congregation. Liking them, he settled in Leyden, without joining the church. He came to New England in the Mayflower, and led in all the military operations of the colony, going foremost in every dangerous undertaking. He was quick of decision, and prompt to act. He terrified Courbittant's hostile faction in Massasoit's tribe by surrounding a village in the night and taking all the inhabitants prisoners. A merchant named Weston having planted a colony of reckless English on the side of Weymouth, who had rendered themselves hateful to the Massachusetts tribe, some of the latter conspired to destroy Plymouth colony and Weston's settlement with the same blow. Massasoit gave information of the plot to the English, and even directed who must be executed by a sudden surprise, in order to cut of the heads of the conspiracy, and so prevent the attack. The danger was imminent, and Standish set out for Weston's colony under color of trading, though some of the Indians reported that the little captain was evidently angry inside. In the insulting carriage of the Indian Standish easily saw their intention to surprise and cut him off. Pecksuot, a stalwart chief, had sharpened his knife on the back as well as on the edge. "This knife," said he, "has a woman's face on the handle. I have another at home; it has a man's face on it, for it has killed an enemy. After a while the two shall get married." Standish and his men fell suddenly on some of the defiant ringleaders, whose names Massasoit had given, and killed them with the knives which the Indians wore about their necks. The little captain, with his own hand, stabbed to death, after a desperate struggle, the powerful and insolent Pecksuot. The measure was a harsh one, but the peril was very great, and Standish had few men. The mode of execution was that by which the Indians were accustomed to deal with such offenders; it was what Pecksuot intended, no doubt, for Standish and his companions. It is to be remembered, too, that the slightest reverse would have brought the whole power of the savage tribes upon the English. Robinson, in Leyden, was deeply grieved at this slaughter, and wrote: "Oh, that you had converted some before you had killed any." Standish carried the head of one of the Indians back to Plymouth, and stuck it up as a barberous trophy. In extenuation, it is necessary to remember that, more than a hundred years later than this, Temple Bar, in London, was decorated with human heads.—Edward Eggleston in the Century.

Strange Custom.

The origin of the custom of burying people with their heads to the West is unknown. From ages back races in all parts of the world have buried their dead with their heads to the West; not invariably, however, but with great uniformity. Probably the remote origin lies in the belief of an immortality and a resurrection, typified by the return of the sun every morning. The dead are buried so that when the time comes they may face the sun, which will wake them. The first pastor of the church at Easthampton, N. Y., it may be remarked, directed that he be buried with his head to the East, so that at the resurrection he might face his congregation; but so general is the custom of burying with the head to the West that this direction is noted as an instance of the minister's eccentricity.

Are You Squirming?

And is it pain that causes you to squirm? Rheumatism will make anyone wince. Counteract it, as you can readily do, at the outset with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which expels the rheumatic virus from the blood and promptly relieves the tortures that it produces. The evidence in its behalf on this point is ample and conclusive, and embraces the deliberate affirmations of many medical practitioners. Like all standard preparations, the Bitters deserves a persistent trial, which, if it receives, the happiest and most thorough results may be confidently anticipated. For malarial, kidney and liver complaints, neuralgia, nervousness, indigestion and loss of flesh and appetite it is a world-famous remedy. Convalescence after debilitating ailments is much facilitated by it.

Queer Names Indeed.

A Savannah paper tells of a physician of that city who was recently called to prescribe for an old negro woman. After ascertaining her symptons and assuring her that her fears of instant death were baseless, he turned his attention to her children—two rollicking pickaninies, who were having a tussle on the floor.

"What's the name of your boys?" he asked the woman.

"That one, sah, is Lake Genevah," said the woman, pointing to her younger child; "and that one, sah, am Lake Superiah."

"Where did you get such names?" asked the doctor in amazement.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food. The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

Certain protection from alum baking powders can be had by declining to accept any substitute for the Royal, which is absolutely pure.

The Choice of a Dog.

I have often been asked what breed of dogs will make the most satisfactory pet. It is hard to determine. Terriers of all kinds are, as a rule, the most intelligent; spaniels are the most docile and affectionate, but are rather cringing and indolent. There are no such defects in the terrior. He is always alert, ready for fun and frolic, or for a rat or a cat, as the case may be. Terriers are high spirited and must be treated with proper respect.

The pugs, now so unfashionable, make good pets; they are never cross or snappy unless teased and tormented. Can anything be more interesting than the staring eyes, the little wrinkled face, the wonderful curl in the tail and the exceeding judicial and dignified manner of the pug?—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Lucky Lawyer.

During a murder trial:

Counsel for prosecution — "As my learned brother on the opposite side has been pleased to refer to me personally I would like the court to understand that during his entire career he has only succeeded in securing light sentences for thirteen usurers and nine pickpockets, whereas I can flatter myself that I have secured liberty for nineteen murderers, thirty-three burglars, twenty-eight pickpockets, twenty-two swindlers, eighteen usurers, twenty-five professional beggars and a host of other criminals, who were really awful scoundrels."—Fliegende Blaetter.

For the Blind.

A geography for blind people has been contrived which enables them to gain a tolerably correct idea of the peculiarities of the earth's surface. The maps are carved from wood or moulded in plaster, and accurately present the inequalities of the surface of the country. Mountains are of course represented by ridges in the map, oceans, rivers, and lakes by perfectly smooth, glassy surfaces, while a little group of toy houses represents a city. The system is admirable, since it is really an object lesson in nature, and enables these unfortuate people to gain ideas which they would never in any other way be able to acquire.

THE disagreeable operation of forcing liquids into the head, and the use of exciting snuffs are being superseded by Ely's Cream Balm, a cure for Catarrh and colds in the head.

I HAVE been a great sufferer from catarrh for ten years; could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely; it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

Apply Balm into each nostril. It is Quickly Absorbed. GIVES RELIEF AT ONCE. Price 50 cents at Druggists or by mail.

Rubber for Floors, Etc.

An Englishman has invented a rubber stud for floors and stairs. It consists of a small iron plate with nails projecting from the under surface, around which rubber is molded. It is fixed in place by a blow of the hammer, the advantage being that when worn it can be easily removed and replaced by others.

SUNSHINE comes, no matter how dark the clouds are, when the woman who is borne down by woman's troubles turns to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. If her life is made gloomy by the chronic weaknesses, delicate derangements, and painful disorders that afflict her sex, they are completely cured. If she's overworked, nervous, or "run-down," she has new life and strength.

"Favorite Prescription" is a powerful, invigorating tonic and a soothing and strengthening nervine, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless. It regulates and promotes all the proper functions of womanhood, improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and vigor. For every "female complaint" and disturbance, it is the only remedy so sure and unfailing that it can be guaranteed.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

One of Nature's Wonders.

The largest volcano in the world is at Mauna Loa in the Sandwich Islands. The crater is twenty miles in diameter, and the stream of lava flowing from it is fifty miles long and in places four miles wide.

JOHN A. SMITH, Ligonier, Ind., had been suffering from severe backache caused, physicians told him, by chronic kidney trouble, and was all broken down in health. He began using Swamp-Root and is now able to do a good day's work and considers himself a well man again. Swamp-Root did the business. He considers it by far the best remedy he has ever used for Kidney Disease.

CONSUMPTION.

"German Syrup"

My niece, Emeline Hawley, was taken with spitting blood, and she became very much alarmed, fearing that dreaded disease, Consumption. She tried nearly all kinds of medicine but nothing did her any good. Finally she took German Syrup and she told me it did her more good than anything she ever tried. It stopped the blood, gave her strength and ease, and a good appetite. I had it from her own lips. Mrs. Mary A. Stacey, Trumbull, Conn. Honor to German Syrup.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. THE REMARKABLE CURES

Of a noted Cincinnati Physician, formerly Professor in Medical College. Will give special attention to difficult cases that other physicians have failed to cure, BOTH MALE AND FEMALE.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnoses and wonderful cures border on that of a miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It costs nothing to see him. The first examinations are free. A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided. The merchant mingles with the artisan in seeking relief at his hands and hundreds are cured every year.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Ella Phillips is home from Hicksville.

The doctors say there is more sickness than usual in our healthy town, for this time of the year.

Mrs. Metevior of Bluffton, visited here the early part of last week, coming more especially to see Jennie North, who has since died.

Mrs. Wellington Farrington has been quite sick for some time. She had at first an attack of grip and has since suffered seriously from its effects.

Some of our townspeople complain of losing clothes from their lines. So long as we have those in town that do not work, or only enough for a blind the only safe way is to leave nothing out over night to be stolen.

The Sunday school of the Presbyterian church will vary their program this year, and will have a cantata on Christmas eve. The M. E. Sunday school will have no Christmas tree, or presents this year. They may celebrate some other way.

The young men of the High school will give an entertainment Dec. 17, at the Globe Theater, at which Creation's Eighth Wonder, the Chronothanatoletron will be exhibited. Admission 15c. Reserved seats, 20; both nights 25 and 35 cents. Lots of fun may be expected.

Miss Jennie North who has been ill for some months with consumption, died Sunday. The funeral occurred Tuesday afternoon. The father and a sister Lydia have before died with this dread disease, and now but three are left. The mother, Mrs McEntarffer, a son, a promising young man, and Mrs Francis wife of our townsman, W. F C. Francis.

Thursday night of last week the dry goods store of Boyer & Leas was entered for the second time within a few weeks, and about three hundred dollars worth of goods taken of nearly the same class of goods as before; overcoats, ladies' coats, etc The burglars entered the building in the same way as at first, through a window, but this time it was at the back of the store Many persons seem to think home talent is at work, although it is probably only a suspicion.

Friday afternoon December 2nd, Solomon Barnhart was hauling either hay or straw into Koons' barn, with Orlando Seery. While tossing it into the mow, Mr. Barnhart fell backward onto the floor. After Mr. Seery reached him he gave a few grasps and was dead He has for some time been troubled with heart difficulty, and his death was caused no doubt by heart failure. The funeral took place the following Sunday. Mr. Barnhart was a quiet, peaceable man, who had few, if any, enemies. He leaves a wife and several children, all married we believe.

ST. JOE.

T. S. Murray of Spencerville, returned from New Paris, Friday.

Is. Wyatt of Concord, was here Saturday night. He had business in justice court.

The St. Joe creamery is now running only every other day, the amount of milk falling off to something like 2000 lbs per day.

M. T. Bishop returned from Michigan Thursday of last week. He informs us that the outlook for cheap lumber is not very encouraging.

The B. & O. people have been making some much needed improvements at the depot. Our old friend Tom. Jourdan superintended the job.

A B. & O. brakeman got his hand badly smashed while coupling cars here last Friday. Dr. Bowman fixed the hand up and he was taken to Garrett.

A son-in-law of Ed. White came here from Northern Michigan last Saturday with a car load of potatoes and apples. He had no trouble in selling, as both articles are very scarce.

Erastus White and son J. I. returned from their Michigan hunt last Thursday they brought with them the skin of two or three foxes and one wild cat. They will be mounted by Dr. B. S. Sheffer and kept by Uncle Rast., as a reminder of their grand hunt.

Real estate in the east end must be having a boom if appearances indicate anything. We imagine that the ad joining farms will soon be laid out in town lots It has been noticed of late that several of our prominent men have business out that way. It is presumed that they are looking for investments. How those investments pan out we leave for the investors and the future to tell.

The Road Congress.

Trustee R. S. S. Reed was at Indianapolis last week to attend the road congress, a meeting of leading men from all over the state, to take into consideration, some plan for securing better roads. Many well known men took part in the discussions. Finally, resolutions were passed, indicating the course, they thought our legislature should take, the substance of which is this:

They will ask that the road law be changed and abolish the system of district supervisors and require in their stead the appointment by the county commissioners of a competent person who shall have the superintendency of the highways of the county.

The compensation is fixed at $5 per day when actually employed. A township supervisor is also to be appointed and be subject to the county superintendent and these shall meet once each year for the purpose of determining what improvements shall be made. The free gravel road law shall be so amended that bonds shall be issued under the laws now in force, payable one-tenth annually at 4 per cent interest per annum; that such bonds be exempt from taxation and that such bond be paid out of the taxes assessed against the real estate within two miles of such road and that in such assessment the real estate owners shall be compelled to pay no more than 4 per cent., on their said assessment, thereby giving them the benefit of the exemption of such bonds from taxation. And, further, that all railroad property located within two miles of the line of such free gravel roads be subject to assessment the same as real estate within two miles.

AN INCOME TAX.

Speech of Hon. C. A. O. McClellan in the House of Representatives, March 30, 1892.

The rich may pay a little more per capita than the poor, because they are able to get more to eat and wear than the poor. But the poor outnumber the rich more than 500 to 1, and so pay almost five hundred times as much tax as the rich. And in addition to what they have been compelled to pay to the government by reason of the protective theory, they have been assessed and compelled to pay to the manufacturer three times $5,000,000,000. Mr. Chairman, what is the result of this legalized robbery? It is the concentration of the accumulated wealth of the country in the hands of a few people, known as the nobility of America with title of millionaires.

President Lincoln, in speaking of the troubles we passed through from 1861 to 1865, said:

"It has been a trying hour for the Republic, but I see a crisis in the future which makes me tremble; it is the corporations and money power. God grant my fears may prove groundless."

I ask you, my countrymen, whether that crisis is not now at hand and should not be avoided by immediate legislation.

The reward of the people for their sweat and toil is being absorbed by the great trusts and corporations and concentrated in the hands, and under the control, of a few people in a small section of the country.

When I arrived at the age of manhood it was not so. Wealth was reasonably well distributed among the people The millionaires could be counted upon the finger ends of one hand. For some reason, due to some cause, a startling change has taken place, and I appeal to you, who lived in those times, to say whether or not the people, the whole people, the rich, the poor, and those in middle life were not better satisfied and happier then than they are to-day.

We were then living under democratic rule. We were upon friendly terms with the nations of the world. Our homes were unencumbered with public or private debts. Taxation was so mild that it was hardly felt; the government, economically administered under just laws, bearing equally upon the people: manufacturers flourishing as they never have since, and, at the same time, labor receiving a just reward. There were no strikes and no lockouts in those times, and the word tramp, with its present meaning, was unknown to the people.

As a matter of course, under such circumstances, agriculture prospered and their products brought better prices than at any other period of our existence, except during the time of the inflation of our currency. From 1846 to 1860 the average price of wheat was $1 49 per bushel, of corn 76 cents per bushel and of wool 33 cents per pound, and the lowest point reached during that time was 30 cents per pound, all under a system of taxation for revenue only.

How is it now, Mr. Chairman; have we no strikes, no lockouts, no tramps, no mutterings from the tillers of the soil, no complaints? Why, Mr. Chairman, the very earth breathes unrest in many sections of our country. There must be something radically wrong

No nation has prospered in the aggregate as ours. Our wealth since the war has been increased from sixteen billions to sixty-three billions of dollars. But this vast increase is not in the hands of those who produced it If it were, it would bring sunshine and happiness to thousands of firesides that are now gloomy and desolate. Who has it? We can only judge by results, and results show us that the crisis foreshadowed by Lincoln is rapidly approaching.

By the most reliable statistics it is shown that we now have twenty-five thousand millionaires, and that they are worth in the aggregate $35,000,000,000, more than one-half of the wealth in the United States, and that they own all the property which yields large dividends or results.

The total amount of our circulating medium on the 1st day of March, 1892, including gold and silver coin and certificates, greenbacks, and national bank notes was $1,609,558,892, and of that sum $626,935,626 was in the United States Treasury, leaving in the hands of the banks and the people $972,623,266. The persons who own and control the $35,000,000,000 are beyond doubt good financiers and make large dividends upon their wealth, all the way from 6 to 200 per cent But suppose they only make 4 per cent., it would amount to $1,400,000,000 per annum, which is $427,376,734 more than all the money in the hands of the people. Thier wealth at compound interest for seventeen years at the low rate of 4 per cent, would double, and they would then own more wealth than we now have in the United States Who must pay that interest, and how can it be done? There is not enough money in the country to pay it even if the debtor class had it.

History informs us that just before the fall of the Roman Empire nineteen hundred patrician capitalists owned nearly all the wealth of that once mighty empire.

Only twenty years of the present rate of concentration may reduce us to the same condition, and the crisis which Lincoln anticipated and trembled for will be upon us Shall we, like him, pray God to avert the calamity, or shall we as American citizens compel honest legislation which will avert it?

Over twelve years ago I was afflicted with a very serious female difficulty, and for the last sixteen months was under treatment of three of the very best physicians that money could employ. Under their skillful treatment I gradually grew worse until they decided they could render me no permanent help. One of my friends persuaded me to try a bottle of Dullam's Great German Female Uterine Tonic and after taking three bottles, can say I am in better health than I have been for twenty years and am now sixty years old, but feel as young as at thirty.—$1 a bottle.

Why General Sherman did not Volunteer.

[From the Sherman Letters in the Century.]

From the time of General Sherman's conversation with Mr. Lincoln he distrusted the preparations of the administration, which favored greatly of militia and recruits. With this army General Sherman was unwilling to cast his lot, believing that he was worthy of a better command or of none. In April he writes to John:

But I say volunteers and militia never were and never will be fit for invasion, and when tried, it will be defeated, and dropt by Lincoln like a hot potato.

And in the same letter:

The time will come in this country when professional knowledge will be appreciated, when men that can be trusted will be wanted, and I will bide my time. I may miss the chance; and if so, all right; but I cannot and will not mix myself in this present call. The first movements of our goeernment will fail, and the leaders will rise, and among them I may be, but at present I will not volunteer as a soldier or anything else. If Congress meet, or if a National Convention be called, and the regular army be put on a footing with the wants of the country, if I am offered a place that suits me, I may accept. But in the present call I will not volunteer.

PERFECTION IN TRAVELING

At 6 30 p. m. daily one of the handsomest trains in the United States and known as the North-Western Limited, leaves the passenger station of the North-Western Line in Chicago, on its journey to St. Paul and Minneapolis, the twin cities of the North-West. Vestibuled throughout, and equipped with buffet, smoking and library cars, private compartment sleeping cars, drawing room sleepers and superb dining cars, it furnishes its occupants with every comfort and convenience which could be desired by the most fastidious.

While in its entirety it undoubtedly takes rank with the finest trains in the world, there are two features of its equipment that deserve especial mention for they are new departures in the western railway world:

The buffet, smoking and library car is furnished in the most luxurious manner, with comfortable arm chairs, writing desks, book-cases and a well stocked buffet, from which light refreshments are served. The private compartment sleeping car is designed especially for the accommodation of family parties and ladies traveling without escort. It is composed of ten separate compartments, each complete in itself, and containing washstand, hot and cold running water and all necessary toilet arrangements.

Aside from these two features, it is in keeping with the rest of the service to say that the supper served in the dining car, after the train leaves Chicago, is a meal calculated to please the epicure.

In a word, if you desire to travel in the most comfortable manner and make the trip to St. Paul, Minneapolis, or any point in the Northwest, in the quickest time, be sure that your ticket reads via the North-Western line. Maps, time tables and full information can be obtained opon application to any ticket agent, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago.

Women as Presidents.

I think the great mistake made by presiding officers of both sexes is forgetfulness of the fact that they are not called upon to rule the opinions of the meeting, writes M. Louise Thomas, the ex-president of Sorosis, in an article in the December Ladies' Home Journal. I have noticed that men, as much as women, are apt to endeavor to control the action of the meeting over which they have been called to preside, and that is something which I consider always objectionable. It is so very clear a matter that the chairman is merely the pivot upon which the whole matter turns, and not the controlling genius of the sentiments of the meeting, that I am sometimes surprised to see people arrogate to themselves powers which they do not possess, and which were never intended to be conferred upon them.

Harper's Weekly.

ILLUSTRATED.

Harper's Weekly is acknowledged as standing first among illustrated weekly periodicals in America. It occupies a place between that of the hurried daily paper and that of the less timely monthly magazine. It includes both literature and news, and presents with equal force and felicity the events of current history and the imaginative themes of fiction. On account of its very complete series of illustrations of the World's Fair, it will be not only the best guide to the great Exposition, but also its best souvenir. Every public event of general interest will be fully illustrated in its pages. Its contributions being from the best writers and artists in this country, it will continue to excel in literature, news and illustrations, all other publications of its class.

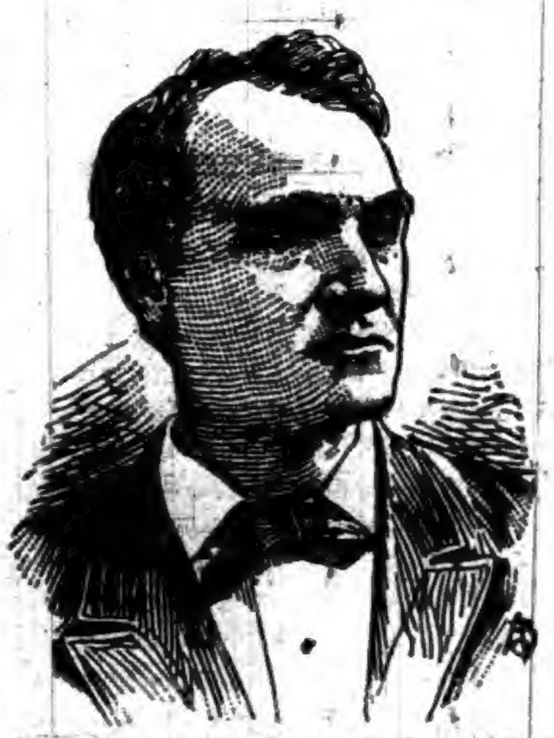
JOHN G. CARLISLE'S,

Great Speech on the Tariff.



MR. PRESIDENT—Perhaps I ought to apologize to the senate for attempting on such a day as this, and at so late a period in the session, to occupy any part of its time in the discussion of a subject which we all agree cannot be disposed of; but the recent report made by the committee on finance in relation to the prices of commodities, the rates of wages and the cost of living in the United States has been so thoroughly misunderstood or so grossly misrepresented in the public press and elsewhere, that I have felt it to be the duty of some one on this side of the chamber who assisted in making that investigation to state our views of its results.

I think it is the unanimous opinion of economists and statisticians who have investigated the subject that for many years, in all the great industrial and commercial countries of the world, the prices of commodities have been decreasing and the rates of wages, especially in those occupations which require a considerable degree of skill and intelligence, have been increasing; of course there are very many and very conspicuous and aggravating exceptions to this general rule, but they are all attributable, in my opinion, to abnormal and artificial conditions, created by unequal and unjust tax laws and by improper governmental interference with the private affairs of the people, discriminating in favor of some and against others.

The Folly of Protection.

Whatever makes it easier for the people to live decently and comfortably, whatever makes the necessaries of life which the people are bound to buy and use cheaper and less expensive to the masses, is a blessing to mankind, and I have never been able to appreciate the wisdom of that policy which compels men to work longer and harder in order to procure food, raiment and shelter for themselves and their families; I have never been able to appreciate either the economic truth or the humanity of the proposition that the people can be made happy and prosperous by taxation, whether the purpose of that taxation be to defray extravagant expenditures on the part of the government, or to increase the prices which the people pay for what they eat, drink and wear.

Mr. President, any one who contends in this day, as the senator from Nevada (Mr. Stewart) apparently has this morning, that high prices of commodities are beneficial to the community at large, is at war with the spirit of the age in which he lives, at war with the genius of discovery and invention which during the last half century more than during any other like period in the history of the world has ameliorated the condition of mankind by bringing all the necessaries of life, and many of its luxuries, within the reach of every man who is willing to work.

I speak of production and distribution together, because cheap and easy distribution is just as important, both to the producer and to the consumer, as cheap and easy production; therefore every shackle imposed upon commerce, every restriction upon honest trade, every interference with the free exchange of products in the markets of the world increases prices and deprives the people of the benefits which they have a right to enjoy, and which they otherwise would enjoy, resulting from improved industrial and commercial methods.

But, Mr. President, it is unnecessary to pursue this line of argument further, because at last it appears to be admitted by the friends of the protective system that cheap commodities for the use of the people are beneficial, and the senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Aldrich), speaking here three days ago as the chosen champion of that system, bases his defense of the tariff act of 1890 almost solely upon the ground that it has reduced prices and enlarged the foreign commerce of the country.

That was not the purpose of the authors and supporters of that law at the time it passed congress, as is conclusively shown by the report which was made to the house of representatives when the bill was presented to that body. In that report Mr. McKinley, speaking for himself and all the Republican members of the committee, said:

"We have not been so much concerned about the prices of the articles we consume as we have been to encourage a system of home production which shall give fair remuneration to domestic producers and fair wages to American workmen, and by increased production and home competition insure fair prices to consumers."

And again, the report says:

"Your committee has not sought by the proposed legislation to further cut down prices at the expense of our own prosperity, but to provide with certainty against that increasing competition from other countries whose conditions our people are unwilling to adopt. We have not believed that our people, already suffering from low prices, can or will be satisfied with legislation which will result in lower prices."

Its Advocates Swept Aside.

Here is a clear and emphatic declaration by the authors of the measure, that it was not intended to reduce prices, that it would not, in fact, reduce prices, and that the people would not be satisfied with any legislation which would produce that result.

The theory that high prices of commodities are beneficial to the community at large, and that the McKinley law would increase them, was abandoned by the advocates of that measure immediately after its passage, and in every part of the country they faced about and either denied that higher prices, in fact, prevailed or contended that they were not produced by the tariff act. The people, however, knew better from personal experience and observation in their daily transactions, and in November, 1890, the authors of that tariff act were swept from the house of representatives by a majority of more than 860,000 votes. Never in the history of the country has there been such a storm of popular indignation against any single act of legislation as that which overwhelmed the advocates of this measure in 1890, and as a result we now have the senator from Rhode Island and all the other friends of the protective system who have recently spoken upon the subject confessing that high prices are not beneficial to the people and that the original and avowed purpose of the act was wrong; in other words, they now contend that the act has been a success solely because it failed to accomplish what it was intended to accomplish.

Aldrich's False Conclusions.

My purpose here today is to show that the tariff act of 1890 did, in fact, interfere with this natural tendency toward a decline in the prices of commodities and a rise in the rates of wages; that it did, in fact, make it harder and more expensive for the masses of the people of the United States to live.

[The senator here read an extract from the speech of Senator Aldrich, who claimed that prices had so far declined and wages so far advanced as to make a total gain to the people of $325,000,000 per year as a result of the Mckinley bill and continued]:

Mr. President, I admit that on a single day after the passage of the McKinley bill, and during the period covered by the investigation, the retail prices of the 215 articles selected by the committee, taking them altogether and giving to each one the same importance, 64-100ths of 1 one per cent. lower than they were at the beginning of the period, and that on the same day, which was the last day included in the investigation, the cost of living in the United States, giving to each article its relative importance as an element in expenditures for consumption, had decreased 44-100ths of 1 per cent. from the rate prevailing at the beginning of the investigation—that is, the cost of living, including rent, which was not investigated by the committee at all, had been reduced 44-100ths of 1 per cent. below what it was during the first three months of the investigation. But that single day has been separated by the senator from Rhode Island from all the other days embraced in the twenty-eight months, and taken as the basis of all the tables presented and statements made by him, as if it was a fair representative of the whole period.

The investigation began on the 1st day of June, 1889, and continued month by month in seventy different cities in the United States until the 1st day of September, 1891, embracing a period of twenty-eight months. The prices of these 215 articles for the first three months at these seventy different places and at quite a number of establishments in each place were taken as the basis of the investigation—that is to say, the average prices which prevailed during the months of June, July and August, 1889, on all the articles were taken as the unit of price, each unit or index of price being represented by 100, and as the prices subsequently rose or fell the fact was noted, and the percentage of rise or fall was recorded in the tables. Now I submit to the senate and the country that no just or valuable conclusion for any purpose whatever can be drawn from calculations based upon prices which prevailed on one single day during those twenty-eight months, that day being, as I have said, the last one on which an investigation was made.

The Cost of Living Increased.

[Senator Carlisle here referred to a statement of Senator Aldrich that in the same time the cost of living had increased in England. He declared that the committee had made no such inquiry; that no such results could be drawn from any facts before the committee, and that other statements in Senator Aldrich's speech were not in evidence before the committee, and continued]:

Mr. President, I propose to show, or at least endeavor to show, that the prices of commodities in the United States, whether considered by wholesale or by retail, were enormously increased by the passage of the McKinley act and the agitation which preceded it, and that the cost of living in the United States, giving to each one of these articles its proper degree of importance in expenditures for consumption, was increased during the period covered by this investigation more than $285,000,000, and that over $185,000,000 of that increase occurred after the passage of the act of 1890.

I venture to make the statement, which I think nobody can refute, that a very large proportion of the increase in prices of manufactured articles and in the cost of living which occurred before the passage of that act was on account of the fact that it was pending in congress with an almost absolute knowledge on the part of the producers of protected articles everywhere that it would be passed and become a law.

I propose to show, in the second place, that the rates of wages in fifteen substantially unprotected industries in this country, selected by the committee, were increased during the period covered by the investigation, and that during the same period the rates of wages in fifteen protected industries in the United States, also selected by the committee, fell, and that the fall was greater after the passage of the McKinley bill than it was during the whole period preceding its passage.

Unless the 215 articles thus selected by the committee are fairly representative of the total quantity of articles consumed by the people, our investigation is worth but little, so far as it attempts to ascertain the cost of living. It would of course be valuable to show the course of prices on those 215 articles; but I repeat, unless they fairly represent all the articles which enter into consumption, the investigation is of but little value so far as it attempts to state the effect of increase in prices upon the cost of living.

[The senator here presented elaborated tables showing a trick in the committee's method of proving a decline in prices; it took prices at a date in 1889, when they had risen in anticipation of the McKinley bill, and at another in 1891, when they were at the lowest. He added]:

To go no farther back to find the influence of the McKinley act upon the retail prices of commodities, we find that from and including Oct. 1, 1890, until June 1, 1891, the prices increased as follows: On Oct. 1, 1890, the increase was $1,333,333 over the prices on Sept. 1; on Nov. 1, 1890, the increase was $3,416,666; on Dec. 1, $7,500,000; on Jan. 1, 1891, it was $10,033,333; on Feb. 1, 1881, it was $11,083,333; on March 1, 1891, it was $11,086,666; on April 1 it was $12,666,666; on May 1 it was $8,750,000, and on June 1 it was $3,666,666.

What the People Spend.

Mr. President, there have been many attempts made to ascertain the total annual expenditures of the people of the United States for articles of consumption. Mr. Edward Atkinson, a gentleman who has given this subject a great deal of thought, estimates from our census reports and other data that of the total population of 65,000,000 people in the United States 23,000,000 are engaged in what are called gainful occupations, earning wages, or salaries, and that the average annual income of these 23,000,000 people, upon which they and all the other people of the United States depend for support, is $600, making for the year $13,800,000,000. Deducting 6 per cent. from that for federal, state and municipal taxes and 10 per cent. for savings or additions to the permanent wealth of the country, there is left $11,582,000,000 to be expended by the people for their support.

The Hon. D. A. Wells, by a different process, arrives at the conclusion, after deducting 6 per cent. for taxes and 10 per cent. for permanent savings or additions to the wealth of the people, that there remains to be expended for their support the sum of $11,957,400,000, or a little more than Mr. Atkinson estimates, but he thinks that is somewhat too large.

If $10,000,000,000 represents the annual expenditures for commodities, then $833,333,333 represents the monthly expenditures, and as we have the increase of prices according to the importance of the articles stated by quarters, the result is not difficult to ascertain.

This is the table heretofore referred to, and it requires no explanation except to say that the second column shows the increase in the cost of living at the end of each quarter over what it was at the beginning of the period:

[illegible]	All articles simply averaged.	All averaged according to importance.	All articles except butter, eggs, potatoes and vegetables, averaged according to importance.
Last quarter, 1889.......	100.26	101.11	99.90

ILLUSTRATED.

Harper's Weekly is acknowledged as standing first among illustrated weekly periodicals in America. It occupies a place between that of the hurried daily paper and that of the less timely monthly magazine. It includes both literature and news, and presents with equal force and felicity the events of current history and the imaginative themes of fiction. On account of its very complete series of illustrations of the World's Fair, it will be not only the best guide to the great Exposition, but also its best souvenir. Every public event of general interest will be fully illustrated in its pages. Its contributions being from the best writers and artists in this country, it will continue to excel in literature, news and illustrations, all other publications of its class.

JOHN G. CARLISLE'S

We find that during the last quarter of the year 1889 the increased cost of living over and above what it was during the third quarter of that year—the quarter which was taken as the basis of the investigation—was $27,750,000. For the first quarter of the year 1890 the cost of living over and above what it was during the first quarter covered by the investigation was $45,000,000. For the second quarter of the year 1890 it was $15,250,000, and I desire to call attention here to the fact that during the second quarter of the year 1890, before the passage of the McKinley act, the cost of living fell considerably below what it was at the end of the first quarter. The third quarter, which closed Oct. 1, 1890, the very day on which the McKinley act was approved, the increase was $12,000,000; but during the next quarter, immediately following the passage of the act, the increase was $45,750,000. The next quarter the cost of living was still going up, and the increase was $89,250,000; but the next, the cost having begun to decline somewhat from the point it had reached, it was $53,750,000, making, in the aggregate, the increased cost of living to the people of the United States during the period covered by this investigation $288,750,000.

Mr. George—How long?

Mr. Carlisle—For twenty-four months, excluding September, 1889, and the three which were taken as a basis. The increased cost of living to the people of the United States during the twenty-four months was $288,750,000; but during the last quarter covered by this investigation, taking the three months together, there was a slight decline of 15-100ths of 1 per cent. in the cost of living, amounting to $3,750,000, which I have deducted from the gross sum, showing a net increase in the cost of living of $285,000,000, the largest proportion of which, or $185,000,000, occurred after the passage of the McKinley act, and a large part of the $100,000,000 increase which occurred before that time is directly attributable to the fact that the bill was pending in congress with almost absolute knowledge on the part of the people that it would pass and become a law.

Now, Mr. President, how does this compare with the statement made by the senator from Rhode Island, that there was such a decline in the cost of living during that period as to represent a saving of $325,000,000 per annum to the people of the United States? Here is $285,000,000 added to the cost of living during that period, which the people have paid; and, no matter what decline may have come at its close, not one cent of it will ever be reimbursed to those who were compelled to expend it for the necessaries of life. That money is gone from them—gone forever—and even though prices may continue to decline without fluctuation after the expiration of the investigation, it does not follow that such decline or a greater one would not have taken place if the McKinley act had never been passed. On the contrary, if the McKinley act had never been passed there would have been a greater decline undoubtedly, and this enormous additional expenditure of $285,000,000 would not have been extorted from the people. Mr. Grosvenor, a gentleman whom this committee must indorse, because it had him employed for some time to assist in collecting prices, made an investigation covering the eighteen months just preceding the beginning of this investigation, June 1, 1889, which showed that the prices of commodities in this country had declined 14 per cent. during that time.

Mr. George—During what year?

Mr. Carlisle—During the eighteen months next preceding the beginning of this investigation. Fortunately it so happened that our investigation began the very day that his investigation closed, and, while his investigation showed that during the eighteen months covered by it the prices of commodities declined in this country 14 per cent., all the senator from Rhode Island can now show is that after twenty-four months of unnecessarily high prices the cost of living on one day at the very end of the period had declined [illegible]-100ths of 1 per cent.!

Is it not perfectly clear, then, that the proposition with which I started out, that the McKinley act had interfered with and arrested this natural tendency toward a decline in the prices of commodities, was correct, and that by its passage the people of the United States were deprived of those benefits which the people of all other civilized countries in the world were realizing on account of modern improvements and discoveries and the practical application of them in their industrial and commercial pursuits?

But, Mr. President, we also investigated the wholesale prices of the same articles during the same period in several different cities and in various establishments in each city, and my statement would not be complete without giving the result of that investigation. That investigation shows, what is the common observation of everybody, that wholesale prices respond more promptly to disturbing causes than retail prices. The reasons for this are obvious. In the first place the wholesale trade is located almost exclusively in the great cities, and is in the hands of comparatively a few men, while the retail trade is scattered all over the country and is in the hands of a great many men.

The wholesale dealers and the manufacturers of the goods they sell look forward to coming events, keep themselves informed of movements in congress and elsewhere, and take advantage of them in advance, while the retail dealer, as a general rule, gives less attention to disturbing influences, because he has his stock on hand, purchased at the old prices, and he continues to sell it substantially at the old prices until he lays in a new stock at the new prices.

This table shows that during the four months preceding Oct. 1, 1889, wholesale prices had never risen above the normal or initial point, except in August, and then they were only 22-100ths of 1 per cent. higher. In September they were lower than the initial price, and they never receded to that point again until August, 1891, a period of nearly two years, and then they were only 7-100ths of 1 per cent. below it.

The group of "cloths and clothing" selected by the committee for the purpose of investigating wholesale prices contains sixty-two articles in general use among the people, and on the 1st of December, 1889, when the Fifty-first congress assembled, the prices of only five of them had advanced since the beginning of the period. The prices of thirteen of them had fallen, and forty-five of them had neither advanced nor declined. The tariff act passed the house of representatives on the 21st day of May, 1890, and by the 1st of June following the prices of sixteen of the articles embraced in this group had increased, and any one who will examine the report of the committee will see that from the 1st day of August, 1890, the articles embraced in this important group, taking them all together, never fell to their original or initial price until Sept. 1, 1891, the last day of the investigation, and then they were only 2-100ths of 1 per cent. lower.

Increase in Wholesale Prices.

Now, Mr. President, by the use of this table, which is a part of the unanimous report of the committee, and assuming as before that the annual expenditure for consumption is $10,000,000,000 and the monthly expenditure $833,333,333, we can ascertain without difficulty the effect which the increase in wholesale prices would have had upon the people of the United States if the whole quantity of commodities consumed during the period covered by the investigation had been sold by the wholesale dealers during that time. That the whole quantity consumed was not actually sold at wholesale during that time is shown by the fact that the aggregate increase in retail prices or in the cost of living did not equal the aggregate increase in wholesale prices.

On the 1st day of October, 1889, upon the basis just stated, which is less than the total expenditure for consumption, the increase over the initial price was $5,150,000; on the 1st day of November, 1889, it was $7,833,333, and on the 1st day of December, 1889, it was $12,583,333. Congress met on the first Monday in December, the committee on ways and means was appointed, and it was soon well known to the country substantially what its policy would be in reference to tariff legislation, and on the 1st day of January, 1890, the increase of wholesale prices over the prices prevailing at the beginning of the investigation was $18,750,000. The next month it was $20,400,000, and then there was a slight decline from that figure until Sept. 1, 1890, when the increase was $24,900,000. The McKinley bill was approved Oct. 1, 1890, and from that date the increase of wholesale prices continued to grow larger month by month until on the 1st day of April, 1891, it was $35,416,666. But I will not detain the senate by a further statement of these increases in detail, but will insert the following table, which will show that the total gross increase from Oct. 1, 1889, to July 1, 1891, amounted to the sum of $445,618,885, but during the months of July and August, 1891, there were small decreases, amounting to $3,108,333, which, being deducted, leaves a net increase of $442,510,532.

Notwithstanding these undeniable facts, the senator from Rhode Island asserted, if not in express terms, at least by necessary inference, that the prices of commodities and the cost of living declined during the period covered by the investigation. He said, "There can be no longer any question as to the course of prices for the period covered by the committee's investigation," and I think every one who heard his speech understood him to maintain that prices and the cost of living were lower during

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1867.

The drummer on business, the traveler for pleasure, the relatives to visit kinsmen and old time friends, coming by hack or stage from Ft. Wayne or Waterloo, alighting at one of the two hotels, after a weary ride over rough roads, found a restful pleasure in the drowsy county seat, so isolated from the busy world, so country-like in the appearance and disposition of its streets.

Despite the publication of successive ordinances rarely read and chiefly constituting a needed patronage to Howard Coe of the Democrat, cows pastured the luxuriant grass by day and raided the gardens by night in seeming wantonness during summer months, and fearlessly foraged the lunch of hay intended for their horses from farmers' sleighs in winter.

There was much debate about needed sidewalks and crossings by the town board and a sense of opposition by delay on part of the lot owners. No one seemed desirous of making a record by public example of voluntary improvements and much municipal legislation went by default.

To provide for increased security against fire the board decided to have a fire warden whose duty was to attend to the proper placing and protection of stoves and stovepipes. S. B. Ward was appointed to this office. For a time discharged its functions when he resigned and H. E. Altenberg was installed his successor.

At the town election 119 votes were cast and parties continued to be equally matched. A single vote elected Walborn, Davis, Watt, Hare and Berry. Among the voters at this election were Simon L. Yandes, Wallace Robbins, Martin L. Duck, J. B. Casebeer and John Hebel. Of these Dr. Casebeer is the only present resident of the town.

The report by John Otto, treasurer was the first and only one in many years which stated in full the financial condition of the municipal fund which was as follows: Receipts cash and orders $278 59. Orders redeemed $378.50. Cash balance $1.07 and orders outstanding $994.99.

Property in '67 was slow of sale. The ideas of owners and of possible buyers were far apart. There were many lots that could have been had for a fraction of their value, and business stands on Main street changed owners for considerations that showed almost despair that the place would ever be much more than it was.

There was great need of a newspaper with a sanguine, energetic editor, one who could perceive and note the possibilities of the locality and enlist combined popular effort, but these were wanting.

Coe and later Carroll in small rooms with hand press, too poor to publish such a newspaper as Auburn needed, sent out papers which rather disclosed weakness than suggested stability. In fact to some extent the character and prosperity of a town are fairly typified by the local publication, and the community, perhaps more than they are aware, are interested in the neatness, size and contents of the sheets that weekly represent them to the public at home and abroad.

In November Howard Coe sold his interest in the Democrat to Wm. H. Dills who placed it in the hands of Mr. Moon who was a practical printer and was to have acted the as publisher, The issue of the paper meanwhile was temporarily suspended.

The fire that during the winter of '67 and '68 burned out Messrs. Hare, Eldridge and Davis, at the same time destroyed the office and the press of the Democrat. Mr. Coe removed and once again Auburn was for a brief time without a paper. One H. D. Carroll essayed to publish a newspaper which he called the Democrat in 1868, but it proved a failure and was soon discontinued leaving behind no chance copy, no remembrance scarcely of the unfortunate publisher.

At Waterloo J. F. Radcliffe & Co. maintained the credit of the town and kept up a proper standard for the Press till Sept when T. Y. Dickinson Esq., who had been abroad as consul at Leipsic associated with Mr. Radcliffe in the publication as editor and later B. F. Kennedy became a partner of the firm.

The war had been a period of inflation and feverish excitement; its close for a time saw no change, but gradually collapse of business followed lack of demand for farm products. Prostration was felt in a thousand towns, and Auburn in 1867 was entering upon a crisis that involved a struggle to retain the county seat and maintain its fading prestige.

Creatures of imitation, under strong confident leadership, we are all disposed to follow an example; but at this dark period there was no one who cared to invest capital in business where failure was inevitable and the example was wanting.

In looking about for some relief, the growing prosperity of Waterloo was observed and attributed to its facilities of communication by reason of its location on a line of railroad and when a party of engineers came along one day making a preliminary survey for a road, the business men gladly contributed to defray the expense and fondly hoped that far away they saw a golden gleam in the clouds presaging better times.

Some advantages expected from the projected railroad northward into Michigan and south to Ft. Wayne were readily apparent and the possibilities of others began to be discussed. In this state, taxes are paid in the court house at the county seat, and as roads were, the pilgrimage thither to pay their "rent" by those living in remote townships was attended with inconveniences that vanished with the laying down of the lines of track converging at Auburn.

Commissioners' Court.

The board organized the first day by electing Lyman Lockwood president for the coming year. A report was received of the Ashley election, and as the conditions had been complied with, it was accepted by the board as a completion of the incorporation of the new town. During the session D. D. Dickerhoff was appointed justice of the peace in Stafford township in place of A. Stepleton, resigned. J. C. Smurr petitioned for an appropriation to help open a highway in Wilmington township; continued to next term. H. J. Shafer was employed as attorney for the board at $200 a year. Wm Click was engaged to run the heating apparatus for the jail, attend to the public square, keep it clean, mow it, etc. for $30 per month. Much work was done, and a good deal of it as will be seen was important. All were present during the session. It was too poor fishing weather to get Lockwood away, and he signed the records each day. Good.

Obituary.

James Findlay Carr was born in Sugar Creek township, Wayne county, O., July 28, 1811, and died Dec. 16, 1892, aged 81 years, 4 months and 18 days.

He moved with his parents to Ashland county, Ohio, in 1816; was married there to Mary Draggoo, in 1829, and moved to Concord township, DeKalb county, Ind., in 1838. From there they moved to Ingham county, Michigan, in 1866; came back to DeKalb county, Indiana, in 1882, and lived with his son William, in Jackson township, the remainder of his days. His faithful wife was taken to rest three years ago, last September. To this union was born 12 children; seven sons and five daughter; seven of whom are still living. He was a devoted husband, a kind father and a faithful christian.

His last words, were: "Jesus take me home to rest."

LIFE'S UPS AND DOWNS

VISITING THE GOOD PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.

A Gold Mine Struck in Utah—Chili's Cash in Settlement of the Baltimore Affair Has Arrived—Drowned in Fifteen Inches of Water—Blaine Better.

CHILI'S CASH

In Settlement of the Baltimore Affair in the Treasury.

Washington special: The $75,000 paid by the Chilian government in settlement in full for all claims arising out of the Baltimore affair at Valpariso has been conveyed into the sub-treasury at New York. The draft for that sum was brought to this country by Minister Egan in October last. It was drawn on the bank of France and was payable thirty days from date of presentation. Minister Egan gave it to the Secretary of State. It then went to the Secretary of the Treasury, by whom it was sent to the assistant treasurer at New York. Its negotiation was then entrusted to Seligman & Co., bankers, by whom collection was duly made through their agents in Paris, and this part of the transaction was closed by the deposit of the money at New York. This necessary preliminary having been performed and the money now being in the actual possession of the government, arrangements will be made as soon as possible for its equitable distribution to the people for whom it is intended. This important branch of the transaction is in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy and it is expected that the matter will be closed up satisfactorily during the present administration.

STRUCK GOLD.

Thousands Flocking Into Utah and the Excitement Equals That of "49."

Durango (Col.) special: The city has gone crazy over the reported discovery of rich placer diggings, located 150 miles from this point in Southern Utah, where the San Juan River empties in the Colorado. The excitement is unparalleled since the days of "49." Along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad from Gallup to the Needles, the towns are almost depopulated and 1,000 men are already on the scene. The placers were discovered less than a year ago by a Navajo trader named Williams. He interested Eastern capital and hydraulic machinery was secretly spirited to the placers under the pretense that it was to be used in developing coal fields. A company has been formed to operate a stage line between this point and the placers, the time from here being shorter than from any other point. In Albuquerque, N. M., nuggets are on exhibition ranging in weight from one to five ounces of coarse gold and all classes of people are leaving their vocations and hurrying to Utah. The gold is described as similar to that discovered in California gulch at the time of the first Leadville excitement.

A Protest.

Washington special: Thomas K Cree of New York city, has written a letter to Secretary Charles Foster protesting against issuing to the World's Columbian Exposition souvenir coins. He bases his protest on what he terms a violation of law by the exhibition authorities in keeping the exposition open on Sundays. He states that the exposition was legally opened in October last and that since that time the exposition authorities have charged an entrance fee for admission to the grounds on Sundays. He declares that Congress voted to close the fair on Sundays and made the appropriation $2,500,000 for the fair with that understanding. Secretary Foster will consider the protest.

It Was Dinamite.

Cahoon & Fisher's hardware store at Crawfordsville, Ind., was swept out and the trash fired in the alley. Suddenly a tremendous explosion occurred, which shook the entire block and shattered window glass for far around. Washington Snyder, who was in the rear of the store was stunned and badly injured. The explosion had been caused by a box of dynamite caps, which was accidentally swept out.

Certificates from Two Governors.

Cheyene (Wyo.) special: Governor Osborne has issued certificates of election to all the legislators elected at the recent election except those in Carbon County, whose cases are now before the Supreme Court. Acting Governor Barber has also issued certificates to the legislators. This action forecasts a dual legislature and the election of two contesting United States Senators.

The Champion Stallion Sold at Auction.

Stamboul, the champion trotting stallion of the world, was sold at auction in New York City for $41,000. The purchaser was D. H. Harriman, a banker in New York City. Five minutes after Stamboul was sold, Mr. Corson, one of the executors of the Hobert estate, said he would give Mr. Harriman $5,000 to withdraw his bid, but Mr. Harriman had then left the building.

Drowned in Fifteen Inches of Water.

William Schultz, the son of Augustus Schultz, a wealthy farmer living near Valparaiso, Ind., was drowned while crossing a bridge. His buggy went off the side throwing him into the ditch. He is supposed to have struck on his head in falling, which stunned him, as the water was only fifteen inches deep.

Mr. Blaine Better.

Reports from Mr. Blaine's residence at eight o'clock Thursday morning, were that he was improving.

Restrict Immigration.

The New York World prints the result of its efforts to ascertain from Governors of various States in the Union their views regarding the moving question of immigration. From the East, West, North, and South restriction of immigration is urged, but the opinions differ as to the methods to be employed. All the Governors heard from oppose absolute prohibition, except for warding off disease.

Passenger and Freight Trains Collide.

On the Cincinnati Southern Railroad the Florida limited collided with a freight train, causing a very bad wreck, but no lives were lost.

LARGE GOLD EXPORTS.

Much Apprehension Caused in the Speculative Markets.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

The shipment of more than $3,000,000 gold to Europe has caused some natural apprehension in speculative markets. It is true that the gold is demanded by Austria under such circumstances that an exceptional premium is paid for it, but neither Austria nor any other country could draw gold from the United States at present unless there were heavy sales of American securities by foreigners. The exports of breadstuffs, cotton, provisions, cattle and petroleum in November amounted to $72,669,392, indicating aggregate exports of about $95,000,000 a month and an excess of merchandise exports over imports not less than $20,000,000. At the same time silver has been going abroad in large amounts. It is clear that unless securities had been moved this way in unusual amount, gold could not be taken abroad in the settlement of international exchanges. But the conditions of domestic trade are decidedly healthy, and the close of the year finds a larger volume of business, both foreign and domestic, than has ever been known before.

NEAR TO DEATH.

Mr. Blaine's Illness So Grave that His Death May Occur Momentarily.

Mr. Blaine's tenure of life is slender. An alarming sinking spell Sunday forenoon reduced his vitality to a low ebb. Powerful heart stimulants revived him enough so that it could be said at midnight that death was not close at hand, and that Mr. Blaine was comfortable and conscious of his surroundings. But the beginning of the end has come with the appearance of the dreaded sinking spells. The physicians give his family absolutely no hope. How long he may linger none can tell. Mr. Blaine is at his Washington home, surrounded by his family.

GOOD AND EVIL IN THE STORM.

Northern Range Cattle Will Suffer, but Kansas Wheat Will Flourish.

The northwestern part of Nebraska, Northern Wyoming and South Dakota are wrapped under a white robe of snow, ranging from one to three feet deep, and still it is snowing, with no sign of abating. The snow is very heavy and the loss of stock will probably be great. Should the wind blow, traffic will be greatly impeded by morning. Over six inches of snow fell at Emporia, Kan., and the ground is covered with a better wheat blanket than it has had for years at this season. Farmers predict good crops as a result.

Long Cruise of a Derelict.

The most remarkable derelict mentioned in the records of the hydrographic office has been sighted again, after a lapse of 102 days. She is the American schooner Wyer G. Sargent, 1,520 tons, abandoned off Hatteras in a gale, with $20,000 worth of mahogany in her hold, on March 31, 1891, just twenty months and seventeen days ago. She was bound from Loguana, Mexico to New York. The last hydrographic office's weekly bulletin says that the old derelict was passed by the steamship Asiatic Prince, bound from Antwerp to Tampico, on Oct. 12, in latitude 32 degrees 30 minutes, longitude 44 degrees 33 minutes, which is about 900 miles due east of Bermuda. The Sargent was dismasted, but one anchor still hung from the cathead. She looked as stanch as she did when she was abandoned by her skipper and crew. She has been an ocean wanderer just 625 days, and has averaged somewhat more than eight miles a day, covering over 5,000 miles. She is the record breaker of derelicts.

Mexico Impatient.

A dispatch from Monterey, Mexico, says: The Mexican Government will demand of President Harrison that he take decisive steps toward breaking up and wiping out the bands of revolutionists that have their rendezvous on United States soil in the lower Rio Grande border country. Gov. Manuel Reyes, of the State of Nuevo Leone, has forwarded to President Harrison documentary evidence in proof that a plot exists among a large force of Mexicans in Texas to make an armed expedition against Mexico. Gov. Reyes is greatly incensed over the inactivity of the military authorities of the United States in not putting down this proposed revolution in its incipiency.

Fasted Seventy-three Days.

The long fast of James Still at the New Brunswick, N. J., Reform School is still unbroken. He has finished the seventy-third day and is still apparently as strong as ever. He performs his daily task of making brushes, and occupies his leisure time in cultivating his newly acquired taste for crayon drawing. All of the attendants who come in contact with Still say his fast is genuine.

Fired by Electric Wires.

The electric light station of the General Electric Company at Buffalo was destroyed by fire, and most of the valuable machinery was ruined. The fire was caused by electricity, and seems to have been unavoidable. The loss will reach $50,000.

Congressman Goodnight Ill.

Isaac H. Goodnight, Representative in Congress from the Third Kentucky District, was taken violently ill at his home in Franklin, and there is serious apprehension as to his condition.

Foolish Boy.

Young George Weisenburger, of Laurel, Ohio, committed suicide with strychnine after quarreling with a younger brother. His mind was affected.

General Rosecrans Greatly Improved.

General Rosecrans continues to improve visibly. He goes about his room and appears to have regained his normal health.

MANY PLANS PROPOSED.

FIVE SUBMITTED TO THE BRUSSELS CONFERENCE.

Remonetization of Silver with a Variable Ratio to Gold Proposed—Allard Suggests Notes Repayable According to Market Prices—Unguaranteed Certificates.

Juggling with Silver.

The Monetary Conference Committee, at Brussels, reported on various schemes which have been introduced to advance its object. The first plan, that of Tietgen of Denmark, consisted in the creation of an international silver currency based on the variable mercantile value of metal in international intercourse, but with unlimited paying power for the respective countries coining it. Sir William Houldsworth's plan proposed the creation of an international silver currency in the form of certificates of deposits as a legal tender in the states which would issue them, but not redeemable in gold. The adoption of these certificates would meet the objections raised against bimetallism on the ground of the inconvenience which recoinage would cause in case of variation in value of the metal gauged by a gold standard. In order to attain this end Sir William Houldsworth proposed a preliminary formation of a bimetallic union, or, if this could not be brought about, at least free silver coinage in one sufficiently strong country.

Of the third plan it was considered that M. Allard, of Belgium, who had drawn it up on the lines of the Windom bill, with an international character added, wished to create an international silver note not possessing the character of legal tender, but repayable to the bearer in weight of silver variable according to the fluctuations of the market, but always representing the nominal value expressed in gold. The states issuing such notes would have to bear in common any possible loss resulting from repayments in case of a depreciation in silver.

The fourth plan, which M. de Foville, the French delegate, desired to encourage, was the practice of depositing silver bullion in mints and banks of issue, with certificates of deposit and commercial warrants negotiable without a legal rate or a guarantee of value on the part of government. Raffaelovitch, of Russia, proposed to give the certificates an international character by establishing a system of warrants enabling the bearers thereof to obtain, on delivery of their receipts, an equal quantity of silver at all institutions which adhered to the plan and having a stock of silver at disposal.

Representatives of the silver-producing countries objected to this proposal as lying outside the program of the conference, the duty of which was to study the means of extending the monetary employment of silver.

The fifth plan, introduced by Sainctelette, of Belgium, and supported by Mr. Montefiore, proposed to create receipts of deposits of gold and silver, bearing such conditions that a certain quantity of gold should be always accompanied by a certain quantity of silver, the proportion of which should be determined periodically by an international commission, which twin deposits would be effected in order to be represented by certificates, the market price of silver to be taken into account in fixing these proportions, that an international character might be given to the certificates.

The report proceeds to reproduce the arguments for and against these plans and asked whether the marriage of the two metals would not be an artificial one, and whether the conventional system would meet those requirements of commerce, which desired, above all things, the simplest possible solution of the problem. On the other hand, it is urged that variations in the price of silver would be lessened, if not altogether stopped, by the coexistence of the two metals in deposits represented by certificates and the relative fixity of value of the twin deposits.

READING COAL COMBINE.

Continuation of the Investigation by the House Committee.

The House committee appointed to investigate the Reading Railroad anthracite coal combination resumed Thursday morning in the Commerce Committee room the inquiry it conducted into this subject during the recess in New York, Philadelphia and elsewhere. William H. Joyce, general freight agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was examined. He offered in evidence a letter dated April 18 last, addressed by him to E. R. Holden, chairman of the anthracite rate committee, New York, calling attention to the fact that during the last year the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, through its coal company, had made with individual operators contracts for the purchase of their coal upon a percentage of the prices realized at tide-water.

The Reading Company, the latter added, had made similar agreements with a number of miners and shippers, and it was therefore necessary for the Pennsylvania Railway to do likewise if it were to secure the product of collieries that had heretofore shipped over its lines. These contracts gave shippers for their coal 60 per cent. of the prices obtained at tide-water. The letter stated that the Pennsylvania Company would therefore reduce its price for carrying coal to tide-water. Witness said that the price over their road was determined by the law of supply and demand.

DARES TO SEEK LIBERTY.

The Colorado Cannibal Anxious to Breathe Free Air.

Alfred Parker, the man-eater, the man who killed and devoured his companions and who took delight in telling the horrible story, has applied for a release from the penitentiary at Canyon City, Colo. Parker without doubt is the most fiendish and ghoulish man who ever escaped the hangman's noose. His record is a gruesome one. In his time it is known that he has killed and eaten five men.

In January, 1874, Al Parker in company with five others left Dry Creek, San Juan County, for the Los Pinos Agency, and in March of the same year he appeared at his destination, wild-eyed, haggard and alone. He told conflicting stories about his companions, finally stating that they had died on the trip. Parker left Bingham, Utah, in the fall of 1873. Winter found his party of twenty-one snowed up at Dry Creek with Chief Ouray, the famous Uncompahgre Ute. After camping with the Indian a few weeks he proposed that a few of them push on to the agency.

In company with Swan, Miller, Bell, Noon and Humphrey they bundled up blankets, cooking utensils and a gun, and with a horse started over the range in the coldest part of the winter. Food was scarce, and soon the horse was turned loose to die. Three days later the provisions gave out and the party became desperate. It was bitterly cold and the snow fell fast. The men took turns breaking the trail, those following carrying the camp utensils. Starving, the men chewed their moccasins, and cut up their blankets to serve as shoes. When the matches gave out fire was carried in a coffee pot by Swan, who was old and feeble. Sometimes the men found frozen rosebuds and leaves and ate them ravenously. Swan gave out when near the top of the Continental divide, and then the devilish work began. Several stories are told, but the one most generally believed is that each agreed to climb the mountain and look for signs of the agency, leaving Swan in camp in a clump of trees. When they left, Parker returned and struck the old man a blow on the head with a hatchet and killed the others as they came in.

Bell, it seems, was bent on murder, and had about made up his mind that some one had to die to save the others. He returned to camp and Parker assaulted him. A fight took place and Bell succumbed. All that winter Parker, ghoulish-like, remained with the dead and subsisted on the choice cuts from their bodies.

The tale is a fearful one. He was arrested at the agency, but escaped and was not again captured until 1883, in Cheyenne. In 1886 he was sentenced on five counts to eight years each, each sentence to commence when the other expired. He is an ex-Union soldier.

NO PRIZES WERE GIVEN.

Victims of Bogus Lottery Tickets in This Country and Canada.

According to the statements of Chicago detectives who have been engaged for over four months in hunting the manufacturers of counterfeit lottery tickets, a stupendous scheme for defrauding lottery ticket purchasers has been discovered. In every city, town and village in Canada, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and the Northwest the members of a gang have operated their clever swindle for about a year and have come out of the game heavy winners. In all of these places persons live who think themselves born under a constellation of lucky stars and several comets, and at every change of the moon they have made investments in lottery tickets. It was to accommodate these persons that the men who are claimed to constitute an unlawful gang have been working. But the tickets they sold were for drawings that never took place.

The end of the business came when a plant for the manufacture of lottery tickets was discovered at 281 and 283 Clark street, and Jacob B. Stanger, the proprietor, was arrested and charged with forgery. The arrest is the outcome of the work of four months by the detectives, who took up the case after W. T. Henderson, of Baltimore, attorney for the Louisina Lottery company, had done some work in the hope of detecting the defrauders. It is believed by officers of the Louisiana company the first issue of counterfeit tickets was made a year ago, and since then and up to the issue of August last the northern tier of States, the West, and Canada have been flooded with these tickets. The market having been kept well supplied, their sale at $1 each has netted the counterfeiters a neat sum.

The men interested in this scheme have not confined their talents to the Louisiana company, but have issued tickets, it is claimed, on a number of companies that do not exist. The detectives confiscated at the Stanger shop a fine lithographic press, about 16,000 Mantanza tickets, December issue; 40,000 Vera Cruz tickets of December and January issue, several large sheets of Louisiana tickets without the numbers and twenty engraving stones and several numbering machines. The plant is valued at $5,000. The Vera Cruz tickets were sold largely in the northwestern part of Chicago, the Mantanza tickets over bars in the country towns of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, while the Louisiana tickets went into Canada, Michigan, Illinois, and the Northwest.

COUNT NEW SENATORS.

Democratic Claims to Nebraska, Kansas, and North Dakota Vigorously Disputed.

The Republican Senatorial caucus met in Washington and further discussed the programme to be followed by the party in regard to the prospective senatorial contests in several of the Western States. A resolution offered by Senator Hawley (Conn.) was adopted authorizing the chairman (Senator Sherman) to appoint a committee of five Senators to take into consideration the wisdom and propriety of senatorial interference in these contests.

The consensus of opinion expressed was that while the Senators did not desire nor intend to interfere with the States in carrying out the will of the people, it was the duty of the Republican Senators to resent strenuously the assertions of the Democrats, who are now, as they charge, trying to pervert public sentiment.

It was shown to the satisfaction of the caucus, so a dispatch says, that the Democratic "steering committee" had no ground upon which to stand when it gave out the authorized interview in New York, and in corroboration of this some figures were produced. In Nebraska it was said by the speakers that the Democrats had but four members in the entire Legislature, and in Kansas but seventeen. In North Dakota the Republicans had a clear majority of nine in both branches, and in Wyoming five. In California and Montana the vote is close, with the Populists holding the balance of power. One of the active members of the caucus said it was not the intention of the Republicans to appoint any so-called "steering committee," for the reason that the only purpose of such a committee would be to exercise an improper influence upon the Legislatures in the States in question.

MR. PEFFER IS ALARMED.

He Sees Danger in the Proposed Change in the Interstate Commerce Law.

The Populists in Congress have taken alarm at certain measures aimed at the Interstate Commerce Act and are fearful that determined effort is to be made to destroy that most beneficent piece of legislation, as they regard it. Senator Peffer (Kansas) is the first to see the workings of the plan. He said that he wished to call attention to some significant facts in connection with the pending Cullom bill to amend the act. This bill, he said, was marked "Introduced by request," and he intimated that it was done at the request of the railway people. It was introduced Tuesday and not printed until Wednesday morning; yet a meeting of the committee was held to hear the railway people almost before the bill was off the press. Looking at the bill itself, Senator Peffer said it was framed to achieve the very thing that the interstate act was intended to prevent, which was pooling. Under its terms the people would surrender the control they now had over the roads, and the latter would once more be authorized to make and maintain any rates they choose to fix. Then the amendment to section 10 of the act would remove the penalty clause so that there would be practically no punishment for violation of the very essence of the act. Altogether, Senator Peffer regards the bill as a most dangerous measure, and announces his purpose to fight it at all points.

INFORMATION has been received from Conshatta, O. T., of the death of Gen. Henry Gray, one of the few surviving members of the Confederate Congress and Brigadier General of the Confederate army.

A NEGRO woman is under arrest at Edgefield, S. C., for murdering her two-year-old babe and then serving it cooked to her friends at a quilting party as roast pig. It is probable that she will be lynched.

AT Lebanon, Glenn, a 4-year-old son of V. V. Wadsworth, was scalded to death by the upsetting of a boiler of hot water.

MRS. MINERVA WRIGHT has filed suit against the Richmond street railway for $5,000 damages for injuries received in an accident.

LOUIS WILHELM, an old resident of Elkhart, was found dead in bed by his wife. He had been ill, but his death was unexpected.

COL. J. H. JORDAN of Martinsville, has been appointed aid-de-camp to the commander's staff of the national organization, G. A. R.

WHILE waiting for his dinner at a restaurant in Lafayette, David Ilgenfritz, a farmer of Tippecanoe County, died suddenly of heart disease.

THE little son of a colored woman named Moore, near Evansville, was terribly burned by his clothes catching fire from a stove. He died from his injuries.

THE Hemingray Glass Company at Muncie is doubling the capacity of its factory, with the addition of a new continuous tank, which will be used in the new factory being built. This is one of the firms burned out last summer.

THE Western Improvement Company has commenced the drilling of the sixth gas well at Yorktown. The new flouring mills at that place are rapidly building, while the new glass factory is arranging to commence operations in a few days.

THE proposed contest for the championship of Indiana between the Laporte City and Ames Union Band of Michigan City for a purse of $2,000 is off, the latter band refusing to accept the former's challenge for $1,000 a side. The challenge was the result of an unsatisfactory decision in a contest at the recent Valparaiso musical festival.

THE Board of Prison Directors at Jeffersonville, consisting of Messrs. McDonald, Slater, and Parks, held the quadrennial election of warden of the prison, and unanimously re-elected Capt. J. B. Patten to that position, as was expected. This is the warden's third term. Dr. Runcie was re-elected prison physician, and Rev. Collop, chaplain.

MAJ. W. M. ANDERSON, a prominent citizen of Rising Sun, aged about sixty-five years, while sitting in a chair, apparently in good health, fell to the floor and expired before relief could be summoned. He was a member of the firm of Anderson & McHenry, who owned the omnibus line between Rising Sun and Aurora, and was noted for his vocal talent.

PARTIES representing a construction company of Chicago were in Kokomo recently, after an overland tour of the gas belt. Their purpose is to build a railroad through the gas territory, the terminal points being Redkey, Jay County, and Kokomo, a distance of fifty-five miles. A company is formed, they say, to push the project to a speedy consummation.

AT Huntington, Mrs. James Webb, an octogenarian who had been confined to her bed for a long time, arose as her husband, also an invalid, went to his dinner. Seizing a razor she cut her throat, the deep gash, however, not severing the juglar vein. On account of her age her life is despaired of. She was supposed to have been temporarily insane.

WORK on the new prison wall at Jeffersonville has been suspended. About 1,132 feet has been constructed, together with three towers. Six hundred and forty-three feet has been finished to the height of seventeen and one-half feet and housed in for the winter. There remains to be constructed 553 feet of wall and two towers. The entire wall when completed will measure 2,328 feet.

THE Secretary of the State Board of Charities has completed his annual financial report. It shows that the cost of maintaining the charities of the State for the past year has been $980,050.17. It is a reduction of $200,000 from that of last year, the erection of buildings not having entered into it. The cost of food has been less, the reform schools have cost more and prisons' less than previously.

A DISTRESSING accident occurred at the Big Four water-tank, at Duck Creek, four miles west of New Castle, in which Walter S. Pressel, fireman of a through freight train, lost his life. Pressel, who was making his first run, had gone on to the tender to fill the tank with water, and after filling started back to the cab. In some way losing his balance, he fell under the train, and his body was severed by the wheels passing over it.

MRS. REBECCA WILSON, colored, aged 52, was instantly killed by the southwestern express on the Big Four Railroad at Muncie. Mrs. Wilson and another colored woman, named Evans, attempted to cross the track in front of the train. Mrs. Evans escaped, but the Wilson woman was struck by the engine and instantly killed, her neck and both legs being broken. Her divorced husband and two married children reside in Grant County, and she has a son residing at Logansport. The train was late at the time of the accident, and was entering the city at increased speed. The alarm of the engineer's whistle was unheeded.

JOHN BUDD killed a large American eagle on his farm, twelve miles from Jasper. The bird was killed on what is known as the "Gray Island," a track of 200 acres in White River. The eagle measured eight feet and ten inches from tip to tip.

MRS. AMELIA POWELL, wife of Henry L. Powell, of Newcastle, was found dead in the waterworks race at Logansport. She has been ill on account of overwork nursing her aged parents, and had gone to Logansport for rest. Some time in the night she escaped from the home of her sister, Mrs. A. R. Shrover, with the above result.

AN association has been formed in Peru with a capital stock of $21,000, for the manufacture of grain drills. Home capital is invested entirely. The company is officered as follows: G. W. Blue President, George C. Miller Vice-President, G. G. Manning Secretary and Treasurer. The firm will be known as the Spring Grain-drill Manufacturing Company.

M. M. M. SLATTERY, chief electrician of the Fort Wayne Electric Company, died at his residence in that city of hemorrhage of the lungs. He had been an invalid for over a year, but this result was not expected. He was the inventor of several valuable electrical appliances, and was widely known among electricians in this country and England.

BANQUET TO MR. CLEVELAND.

Annual Feast of the Reform Club Held at New York City.

At the annual banquet of the Reform Club at Madison Square Garden, in New York, the President-elect was the bright particular star and most honored guest. He occupied the post of honor at the right hand of E. Ellery Anderson, President of the club. After all the guests had been seated, Mr. Anderson, who presided, arose and delivered the welcoming address. Among other things he said:

We meet to-night to celebrate the personal triumph of the man who, knowing the truth, dared proclaim it, and whose courageous course pointed out to the party the path to victory. You, sir, have received the enthusiastic and universal support of the party because your cause was their cause; because your beliefs were their beliefs. We have high authority for saying that Mr. Cleveland is a popular man, an extraordinarily popular man, on every day of the year except election day; and we have still higher authority for declaring that on election day he is irresistible. We all understand and appreciate that the path which confronts you contains perhaps as many thorns as roses. The duties assumed are weighty; the difficulties to be overcome are many; but the great Democratic party will always be with you, will always support you, because it has implicit faith in you. This support will not be given for hope of reward. Fellow Democrats here assembled, it is my high privilege and honor to ask you to unite with me in proposing the health and prosperous administration of our President-elect, Grover Cleveland.

Mr. Cleveland's Speech.

President-elect Cleveland was the next speaker. He was received most enthusiastically, and three cheers were given before he was allowed to proceed. The people in the boxes rose with one accord. Even the ladies in the gallery cheered, while Mrs. Cleveland looked placidly on. When the enthusiasm subsided Mr. Cleveland said:

MR. PRESIDENT AND LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I have nothing new or startling to say to you, and I hope to do little more than remind you of the meaning and significance of this occasion. As we are here gathered together, we represent those who have been willing to risk all consequences in a battle for principles which are grounded in purest patriotism, because they accord with the purposes and objects of our free institutions. A plain feature of this gathering, which I am sure warms the hearts of all of us, is our celebration of one of the grandest and most complete victories ever achieved in the struggle for right and justice; and our glad greeting of the brightest light of triumph our generation has seen, bursting from the clouds of defeat and discouragement.

Let me suggest to you, however, that we can contemplate nothing more gratifying in connection with this assemblage than the proof it affords that the American people can be trusted to manage the government which has been given into their keeping. If there are those who have been disappointed and disheartened by the extent to which our people have been deceived and misled, or who, with fear, have seen heedlessness of the duty of citizenship open wide the door of corrupting influences, or who, with sad forebodings, have beheld popular rule nearing the fatal rocks of a debauched suffrage, or who have mourned because appeals to selfishness and promises of unequal advantages were apparently undermining that patriotism which alone justifies our hope of national perpetuity, let this occasion and the events which have led to it reinstate their faith and their confidence in their countrymen. If it has seemed to those striving for better public sentiment that the disposition was growing among our people to regard their government as a depository of individual benefits, to be importuned and threatened and despoiled, let them take heart from the evidences now before our eyes, that there is still abroad in the land a controlling belief that our government should be a source of just and beneficent rule, proudly supported by free men, protected by their care and watchfulness, and returning to all our people, with equal hand, the safety and happiness it holds in store for them.

If we have learned that an appeal to the patriotism of our countrymen and an honest presentation of political principles to their intelligence and judgment are not in vain, the thought must not escape us that while our people will in the end repay with their support the political party which addresses their understanding and reason, they will surely revenge themselves upon those who deceive or betray them.

The National Democracy and its allies in political principle rejoice over the defeat of those whose fate is full of instruction and warning. While we find in our triumph a result of the popular intelligence which we have aroused, and a consequence of popular vigilance which we have stimulated, let us not for a moment forget that our accession to power will find neither this intelligence nor this vigilance dead or slumbering. We are thus brought face to face with the reflection that if we are not to be tormented by the spirits which we ourselves have called up we must hear above victorious shouts the call of our fellow countrymen to public duty and must put on a garb befitting public servants.

The sentiment suggested by this occasion, which should dwarf all others, has relation to the responsibility which awaits those who do not rejoice in victory. If we redeem the promises we have made to the voters of our land the difficulty of our task can hardly be exaggerated. Conditions involving most important interests must be reviewed and modified, and perplexing problems menacing our safety must be settled. Above all, and as the ultimate object of all we do, the rights and the welfare of our people in every condition of life must be placed upon a more equal plane of opportunity and advantage.

I am confident that the wisdom of the Democratic party will be equal to the emergency, and I base my confidence upon the belief that it will be patriotically true to its principles and traditions, and will follow the path marked out by true American sentiment. We should not enter upon our work in the least spirit of resentment nor in heedless disregard of the welfare of any portion of our citizens. The mission of our party and the reforms we contemplate do not involve the encouragement of jealous animosities nor a destructive discrimination between American interests.

In order that we may begin with free hands we should vigorously oppose all delusions which have their origin in undemocratic teachings or in demagogic attempts to deceive the people. Mere catchwords, which, if they mean anything, have no relation to sound policy, and phrases invented to please the ear of the victims of cunning greed ought not to stand in our way. Looking beyond all these we shall find just principles furnishing a vantage ground from which we can lay out a safe course of action. We should strive to rid ourselves and our countrymen of the idea that there is anything shabby or disgraceful in economy, whether in public or private life. If extravagance in public expenditure has prevailed in the past it affords no excuse for its continuance, and there is no breach of duty so palpable as the waste of money held by public servants for the people's uses.

Our Government was founded in a spirit of frugality and economy, and its administration should not depart from those lines. We need no glitter nor show to divert our people from turbulent thoughts. We have a more substantial guaranty against discontent in a plain and simple plan of rule in which every citizen has a share. In order that this should do its perfect work it is essential that there should exist among our people a wholesome and disinterested love for their government, for its own sake, and because it is a heritage belonging to all. The cultivation of such a sentiment is not only a high duty, but an absolute necessity to the consummation of the reforms we enter upon. We shall utterly and disgracefully fail if we attempt these reforms under the influence of petty partisan scheming or the fear of jeopardizing personal political fortunes. They can only be accomplished when unselfish patriotism guides the aspirations of our people and regulates the action of their chosen servants.

We who are to be charged with the responsibility of making and executing the laws should begin our preparation for the task by a rigid self-examination and by a self-purgation from all ignoble and unworthy tendencies threatening to enter into our motives and designs. Then may we enjoin upon all our countrymen the same duty, and then may we hope to perform faithfully and successfully the work intrusted to our hands by a confiding people.

CHARLES DICKENS
FREE!
The Most Valuable and Remarkable Premium Ever Offered Free with any Periodical.
A MARVEL IN BOOK-MAKING.
A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, IN 12 LARGE VOLUMES, FREE.

There has just been published A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, in Large and Handsome Volumes, printed from entirely new plates, with new type. By special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer to our patrons this splendid set of Dickens' Works, postpaid, free. Charles Dickens was the greatest novelist who ever lived. No author before or since his time has won the fame that he achieved, and his works are even more popular to-day than during his lifetime. They abound in wit, humor, pathos, masterly delineation of character, vivid descriptions of places and incidents, thrilling and skillfully wrought plots. Each book is intensely interesting. No home should be without a set of these great and remarkable works. Not to have read them is to be far behind the age in which we live. The twelve volumes in this set contain the following world-famous works, each one of which is published complete, unchanged and absolutely unabridged:

DAVID COPPERFIELD,
MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT,
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY,
DOMBEY AND SON,
BLEAK HOUSE,
LITTLE DORRIT,
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND,
PICKWICK PAPERS,
BARNABY RUDGE AND CHRISTMAS STORIES,
OLIVER TWIST AND GREAT EXPECTATIONS,
THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP AND THE UNCOMMERCIAL TRAVELER,
A TALE OF TWO CITIES, HARD TIMES, AND THE MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD.

THE PLAN.

We will send a complete set of these books FREE, by mail, postage paid, guaranteeing safe delivery, as follows: To any old subscriber, who sends one dollar, and renews their subscription to either of the following publications for one year:

THE PEOPLE'S LITERARY COMPANION,
—OR—
The National Farmer and Home Magazine

This is the grandest offer ever made, and the greatest bargain ever offered. Up to this time the price of a complete set of Dickens' Works has been ten dollars or more. The use of modern, improved printing, folding and stitching machinery, the present extremely low price of white paper, and the great competition in the book trade are the factors which made this wonderful offer possible. Bear in mind that we offer, not a single volume, but the entire set of twelve volumes all free to subscribers. All may now afford the luxury of owning a handsome set of Dickens' works. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Do not neglect or put off this wonderful opportunity. Send at once; you will be delighted with the charming books, and, as long as you live, never cease to regard it as the best investment of a dollar you ever made. Address all communications to and write, and are possessed of fair intelligence, you are fully qualified to make a grand success of what we offer you. We have lately published at great expense and labor a perfect wonder in the way of an illustrated Gift Book, suitable to all classes, an ornament to any home, and at a price that brings it within the reach of all, even those of moderate means. Heretofore only those who indulged in luxuries have felt that they could afford a book of this class, as they are sold in book stores at $5.00 and upwards. The book which we offer is not in any way inferior to those above referred to, but is far superior to hundreds of books of this nature that are sold at prices exceeding ours by an enormous per cent. It is selling with a rush wherever shown. Agents have only to show the book and mention the price, and it sells on its merits without further talking. No better Christmas, New Year's or Birthday present can be selected. It will sell, not only for holiday trade, but at all seasons of the year, for the reason that all will want it in their homes, and will have it as soon as they know the low price at which our agents can furnish them. Reader, if you need profitable employment, and a business in which you can and will take pride, as well as make money rapidly, do not fail to send for circulars containing private terms to agents, and full information which will be sent FREE upon application. Old and new agents alike are making handsome salaries—yes, fortunes. Many of those who are making the best records are new at the agency business, having had no previous experience. ☞ Make a start—the field is entirely new. No such terms have been offered agents as we now offer on this wonderful book. Special qualifications not necessary, for it sells everywhere at sight. Perhaps you have at some time been unsuccessful at the agency business. If so, there is every reason why you should try this, the PRINCE of gift books, as failure is impossible if you make A START. Write us to-day, study our circulars and directions, then order an outfit and go to work with push and energy. You may make the greatest mistake of your life if you allow this GOLDEN opportunity to pass unimproved.

IMPROVED
ROASTER & BAKER

FOR MEATS, FOWL, FISH, ETC., AND FOR BAKING BREAD, CAKES AND PUDDINGS.

BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS

Beneath the blue Judean sky
Three crowned kings swiftly strode,
Each with his gaze fast fixed upon
A star that brightly glowed.
They wandered o'er the chilly plain,
Their feet were weary sore;
They sought a King long, long foretold,
And costly gifts they bore.
Soft raiment, jewels rich and rare,
And ointments subtle sweet
They carried in their hands to lay
Low at His royal feet.

They heard with awe such music pour
As ne'er reached mortal ear—
The angels chanting strong and deep—
Sphere-calling upon sphere.
Lower and lower swung the star
Within the azure air.
Three crowned kings trembled at the sight,
And followed swiftly where
It hung above a stable shed,
With rays effulgent, mild,
Where, housed with lowing herds, they found
The mother and the Child.

Three crowned kings fell upon their knees
With meekly reverent grace;
They knew Him by the ring-lit brow,
The glory on His face.
Lo! we have found Him whom we sought;
We know Him by the sign.
But how unmeet this lowly place!
How rude and coarse a shrine!
They spread their costly treasures there
About sweet Mary's knee,
And there the Christ mass first was said
For Him the one in three.

And e'en as on that Christmas eve,
Long centuries ago,
We seek Him whom the three kings sought,
We have not far to go.
For where the poor and needy are,
The weary ones and weak,
We find Him whom the seers foretold,
The King whom nations seek,
And who so doth His Christmas feast
With the cold and hungry share,
Lo! he will find the Christmas King
Partaking with them there.
—Inter Ocean.

TO SPEND CHRISTMAS.

RAGS
BOTTLE

"INVITED me to spend Christmas with 'em, eh?" said old Mr. Knott, pausing in his task of soldering a new tin bottom into a superannuated wash boiler. "Well, it's the first one of our relations as has ever took so much trouble as that for us, eh, old woman?"

Mrs. Knott, who might have formed no bad model for the Witch of Endor, as she bent over the fire of sticks, in her old red hood, from which escaped gray elflocks innumerable, uttered a significant snort which might have been construed into almost any meaning.

"What d'ye s'pose they expect to get out of us now?" demanded the old man.

"He's your own sister's son, Hezekiah," said the woman.

"Sisters' sons ain't different from other folks, as I knows on," said Hezekiah Knott succinctly. And this 'ere's a selfish world."

"Ain't many people selfisher than you and I be," observed Priscilla, his wife.

"But it beats me what they should waste a two-cent postage stamp on askin' you and me to come and eat a Christmas dinner with 'em for!" said the old man. "Me, as is in the rag business, and you as is only my wife!"

"It's just possible they wanted to see us," suggested Mrs. Knott, who by this time had blown the fire into a full, uncompromising blaze, and now leaned back against the door-way, satisfied with the result of her efforts.

"Tell that to the marines," was the comment of her incredulous husband.

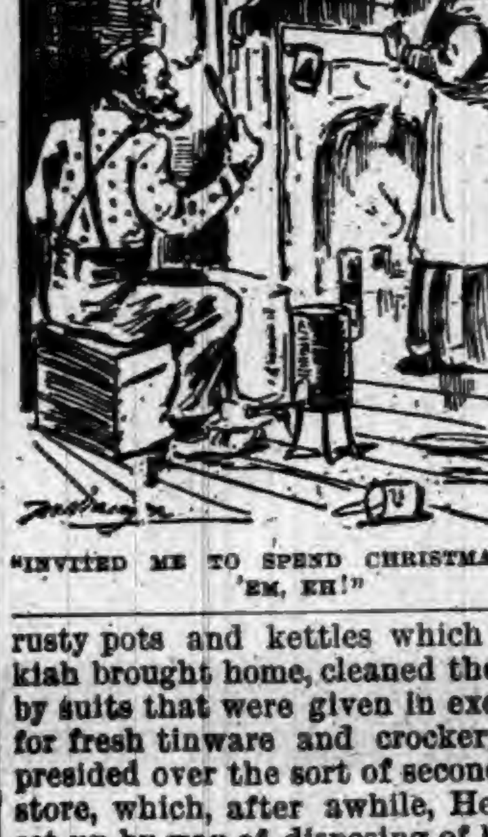
There was no denying that the different branches of the Knott family had been sorely scandalized when Hezekiah boldly bought a horse and cart and went into the rag-and-bottle business, instead of preaching the gospel, like his elder brother, or accepting a clerkship in a village store, like the younger one.

"I hadn't brains like Bill, nor capital like John," said this black sheep of the Knotts. "And I allays liked bein' in the open air. And, arter all, there ain't so much difference betwixt sellin' wares out of a waggin', and handin' 'em across the counter, is there?"

The Baptist minister looked steadfastly the other way when the sounding of divers and sundry bells announced the coming of the tin-peddler's wagon; the budding merchant desired his wife to have nothing whatever to do with Hezekiah's helpmate, in a social point of view; but the shrewd New-Englander only smiled and shrugged his shoulders.

"I'm gettin' my livin', anyway," said he. "The best on 'em can't do more than that."

Mrs. Knott, who was a silent, philosophical sort of a woman, toiled away in her kitchen, scouring up the rusty pots and kettles which Hezekiah brought home, cleaned the shabby suits that were given in exchange for fresh tinware and crockery, and presided over the sort of second-hand store, which, after awhile, Hezekiah set up by way of disposing of his surplus wares. And in time people got into the way of going to "Knott's place" for cheap goods, second-hand articles, and all manner of odds and ends. Prices were always reasonable there—the articles were varied and unique—and there is no one who likes better to save money than your average country farmer.



"INVITED ME TO SPEND CHRISTMAS WITH 'EM, EH!"

The Baptist minister had surrounded himself with the "I-am-holier-than-thou" atmosphere, the storekeeper had undoubtedly the advantage of gentility, but it is questionable whether, after all, old Hezekiah was not the happier of the three. Day after day he was on the road. He knew the orchard where the reddest apples grew, the copses where bubbled out the clearest springs, the shadowy thickets where the brown-coated chestnuts rattled down at the touch of the earliest frosts.

In his quaint way he studied Nature, and rejoiced in her mysteries, and cared little that he was outlawed by his kith and kin. And those were not altogether wrong who declared that he shouted "Ra-a-gs—old ra-a-gs—bottles and tin-a-a-ware!" all the louder when he came past the stiff lilac bushes of the parsonage garden, and trudged beneath the shadow of the country store where his brother practiced the great principles of "exchange and barter."

But Jonathan, the only son of the old man's only sister, had always surreptitiously delighted in the mysterious contents of the basement where these second-hand goods were packed away. He had helped his uncle tinker up the old clocks, mend the battered tea-kettles and saucepans, and sort out from the rag-heap all that promised to be capable of some rejuvenation. When he married the district school teacher, however, Hezekiah shook his head doubtfully.

"We've seen the last of Jonathan now," says he. "Mary Mix'll be a deal too genteel to let him associate 'long of us any more."

But here on the top of all this came the invitation to the first Christmas dinner in the young couple's new home.

It had not, however, been sent without some discussion.

"What!" Mary had exclaimed. "Invite the old rag-and-bottle man?"

"He's the jolliest old chap you ever knew, Mate," pleaded the bridegroom. "And Aunt Viney's a regular brick. I wish you could see the big ginger cookies she used to bake for me."

"But if they come, Uncle William and Uncle John will keep away," argued Mary.

"Let 'em," was the curt reply. "Uncle Kiah's the best of the lot, accordin' to my way of thinkin'."

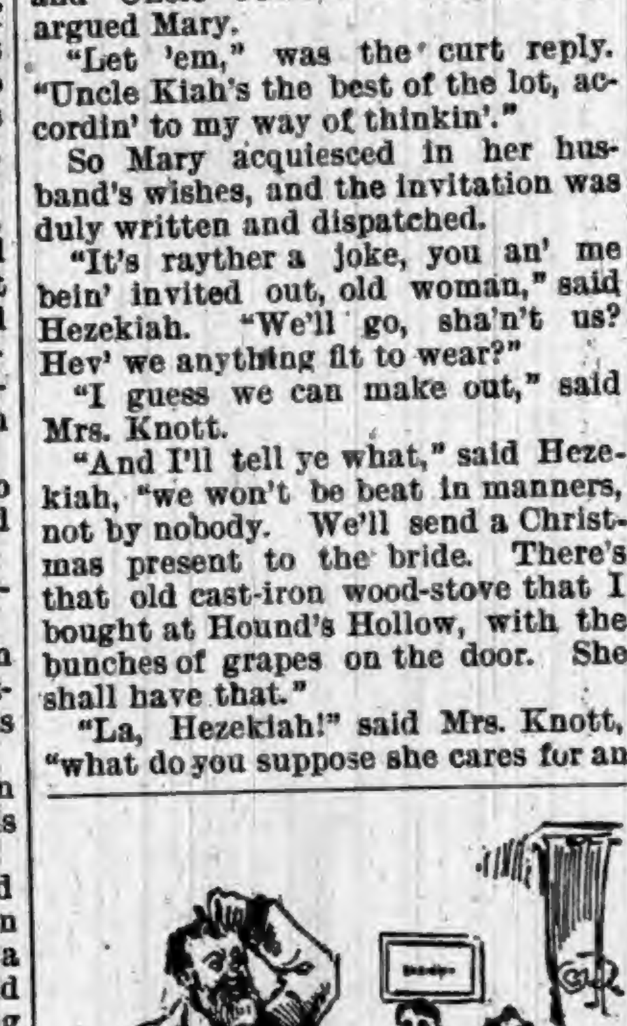
So Mary acquiesced in her husband's wishes, and the invitation was duly written and dispatched.

"It's raything a joke, you an' me bein' invited out, old woman," said Hezekiah. "We'll go, sha'n't us? Hev' we anything fit to wear?"

"I guess we can make out," said Mrs. Knott.

"And I'll tell ye what," said Hezekiah, "we won't be beat in manners, not by nobody. We'll send a Christmas present to the bride. There's that old cast-iron wood-stove that I bought at Hound's Hollow, with the bunches of grapes on the door. She shall have that."

"La, Hezekiah!" said Mrs. Knott, "what do you suppose she cares for an old second-hand rattle-trap like that? It's mor'n likely she's got all the stoves that she wants."



"YOU'VE BURNED UP YOUR CHRISTMAS PRESENT."

"A stove's a stove, anyhow," said Hezekiah. "And I mean to send it to her, so you may just stop your clack, old woman."

Mrs. Knott only smiled. She was used to the pertinacity of her spouse, and she gave way with a good grace.

"Oh, what a pretty little stove!" said Mrs. Jonathan, when it was carried into the neat best parlor on Christmas morning. "And how brightly it is blacked!"

"Just like Uncle Kiah!" said Jonathan, who was polishing red apples, sorting out the fattest and largest nuts, and sharpening the carving-knife for the coming feast. "Might ha' known he'd send something different from anybody else. But, since it's here, I guess I'll put it up at once. It's prettier to look at than that air-tight thing; and we can start a fire right off."

"But he sent word," interrupted Mary, "that we weren't to light the fire till he came. He wanted to show us the valves and dampers and things."

"Does he think nobody knows how to start a fire but him?" said Jonathan, laughing. "No, no; on a cold morning like this we can't afford to wait."

And so, when Uncle Hezekiah and Aunt Malvina arrived in a cumbrous little buggy drawn by the business pony, the parlor glowed with tropical heat, and the little stove presented its most hospitable aspect.

"Wish ye merry Christmas, Jonathan—and you, too, Jonathan's wife," was Uncle Hezekiah's greeting, as he trudged up the steps.

"And many happy returns," courtesied Aunt Malvina, who carried an old china sugar bowl in one hand and its corresponding cream pitcher in a basket in the other. "Will you please to accept some pretty old china as we've took in trade?"

Mary came forward with a beaming smile and both hands held out.

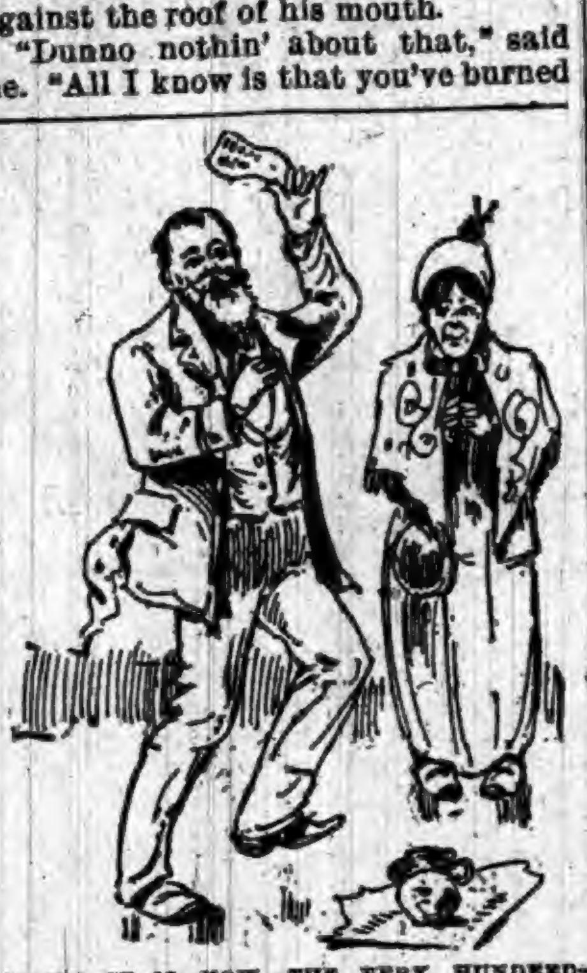
"We are so glad to welcome you here," said she. "A merry, merry Christmas, aunt and uncle."

"Hal-loo!" said Knott, looking around him. "So you started the fire, did ye?"

"Yes, Uncle Kiah," said Jonathan, "I started it. Do you suppose I wanted to give my relatives a cold welcome, eh?"

Uncle Kiah clicked his tongue against the roof of his mouth.

"Dunno nothin' about that," said he. "All I know is that you've burned up your Christmas present, disobeying orders this sort o'way."



"HERE IT IS NOW—THE VERY HUNDRED-DOLLAR BOND!"

"Eh?" said Jonathan.

"Uncle, what do you mean?" cried Mary.

Uncle Kiah stamped around the room and tore his hair in an ecstasy of rage.

"The fools ain't all dead yet!" said he; "that's plain enough. I'd laid out to give you and your wife here a hundred-dollar bond for a Christmas gift—and I packed it into the old stove-pipe, with a lot of waste-paper, to make sure there shouldn't be no mistake about your gettin' on it, and so it's gone up chimbly, with the rest of the sparks and smoke!"

Jonathan grew lividly pale. Mary uttered a little shriek of dismay. For a moment the Christmas glow seemed to have faded out of all their hearts.

For a moment only, however. Aunt Viney came promptly to the rescue.

"You're right there, Hezekiah Knott," said she. "The fools ain't all dead, so long's you're left alive; for nobody but a fool would ha' thought of tuckin' hundred-dollar bonds up into the elber of an old stove-pipe. And it's lucky for you and these young folks here that I happened to want a little waste paper to wrap round this 'ere old china in my basket, and took the stuffin' outen the stove-pipe—ain't it now?"

She extended the basket to Mary Knott. Old Hezekiah pounced upon it like a starved cat on a mouse, and dragged the paper wrapping forth.

"Here it is now—the very hundred-dollar bond!" he shrieked, waving it triumphantly above his head. "A merry Christmas! Hooray, Jonathan! —a merry Christmas! Old woman," to his wife, "you're the sensiblest of the lot!"

And so they all sat down to the first Christmas dinner that Mary Knott had ever cooked—with bright faces and joyful hearts.

"Uncle," said Jonathan, "how shall Mary and I ever thank you for your generous present?"

"Don't say nothin' more about it," said Uncle Kiah. "You're the only one of our relations as ever invited us to spend Christmas—and I guess we can afford to make you a present; eh, old woman?"

And Aunt Viney smiled a broad assent.—Young Ladies' Bazar.

"Going in Swimming."

The liking for bathing in the open air, in water deep enough for swimming, is so universal, so natural and so conducive to cleanliness and health, and the ability to swim is so useful a thing, that no boy can be blamed for a liking for it.

But the risk attending ordinary swimming is often great. Every interior town or village usually has a swimming-hole, where the boys go to swim after nightfall.

Very often this place is in a mill-pond, where reeds and grass grow from the muddy bottom to entangle swimmers' feet, or where there are dangerous water-wheels or race-ways near by.

Rough and disorderly boys or men, who delight in throwing small boys into the water or dragging under it, as a joke, those who cannot swim, often resort to these places. Altogether, it is not a matter for wonder that anxious parents often refuse their boys permission to learn to swim, or that boys are often drowned in trying to learn.

Certainly no other useful art is taught in such a haphazard, life-or-death way; nor is it necessary that swimming should be so taught.

With a little work in odd hours, the men of each community might easily provide a proper swimming-place.

Such a place would have water of varying depths, clear of obstructions and dangers. A very little public spirit and enterprise would clear the swimming pool of each neighborhood of things dangerous to swimmers, and would surround it, in two or three years, with a thick screen of bushes and trees, so that swimming in daylight would be an offense to no one.

A little additional attention on the part of the public authorities or the older people would prevent boys who cannot swim from running any risk except when good swimmers and prudent persons, boys or men, were present.

It is always a pleasure to such persons to teach the young to swim; and under such circumstances there would be plenty of opportunity for all to learn to swim, and enjoy a bath and a plunge in cool, deep water, with almost no risk at all to human life.—Youth's Companion.

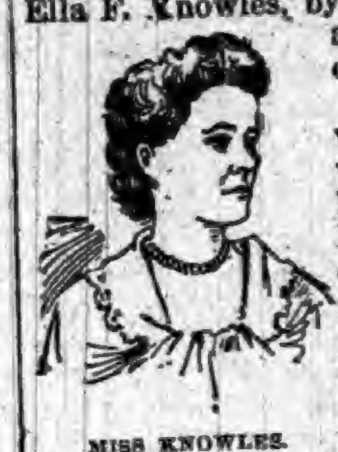
Walter Besant has laid aside his novels for a time and is working on a one-act comedy. The average novelist never feels so like the farmer who was trying to plow with dogs as when he endeavors to put his character creations upon the stage and make them talk and move so as to suit a dramatic manager.

Is there not such a thing as being too prudent ever to fall in love?

A WOMAN LAWYER.

The Remarkable Career of Miss Ella F. Knowles—Her Legal Work.

One of the queer things in the election of 1892 was the choosing of Miss Ella F. Knowles, by a large majority, as Attorney General of Montana.



MISS KNOWLES.

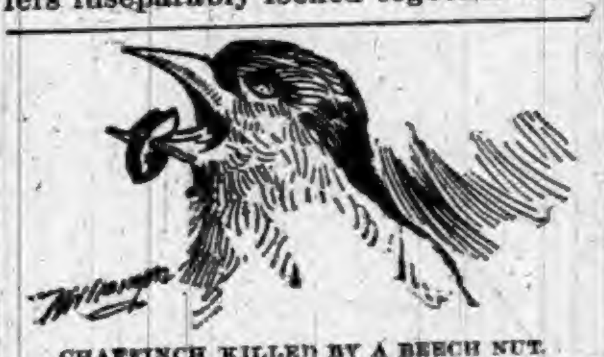
Miss Knowles was born in Northwood, Rockingham county, N. H., and is the daughter of David Knowles and Louisa Knowles. Her mother died when she was 14 years of age, and she graduated from the Northwood Seminary at the age of 15, and one year later from the New Hampshire State Normal School. Afterwards she went to Bates College, Lewiston, Me., from which she graduated in the class of '84, receiving the degree of A. B. Four years later Bates College conferred on her the degree of A. M.

In 1885 Miss Knowles commenced the study of law in the office of Burnham & Brown, Manchester, N. H. She prosecuted her studies there about a year, when, on account of ill health, she went West, and took the chair of elocution and Latin in Iowa College. Being advised by physicians to go among the mountains, she went to Helena in the fall of 1887. She taught one year in the central school there, and then resumed the study of law. There was considerable prejudice against allowing her to practice. So the little woman went to work among the members of the last Territorial Legislature, that of 1888-'89, and had a bill introduced and passed to admit women to practice law. She was admitted to the bar on December 1, 1890. Now she has a practice of which many men would be proud, and is peculiarly popular among them.

KILLED BY A BEECH NUT.

Peculiar Accident Which Ended the Life of a Chaffinch.

There have been instances of deer meeting death by having their antlers inseparably locked together during a fight, and also of wading birds being captured and slowly killed by the occupants of bivalve shells on the seashore. The illustration represents the only known example of an animal being killed in this peculiar way. The bird is a chaffinch, and he has lost his life by pecking his lower mandible through a beech nut that he was vainly endeavoring to open. The shell became tightly wedged on the beak so that the unfortunate bird was unable to scrape it off, and death by starvation was the inevitable result.



CHAFFINCH KILLED BY A BEECH NUT.

How Famous Rulers Died.

Louis XVII., titular King of France, the unfortunate dauphin, died in the Temple of Paris of abuse and neglect. His body was identified and certified to by four members of the Committee on Public Safety and by more than twenty officials of the temple. The remains were privately buried in the cemetery of St. Marguerite and every trace of the grave was carefully obliterated.

Herod the Great was attacked by a vile disease, which caused his body to mortify even before death. When aware that he was near his end he commanded all the most noble and prominent men of the Jewish nation to be apprehended and confined in a theater near his palace and gave orders that as soon as he was dead they were all to be slain. He intended, he said, to have mourning at his death. They were released after he had breathed his last.

William the Conqueror was a man of very gross habit of body, and at the siege of Nantes was hurt by the rearing of his horse, the pommel of the saddle striking the King in the abdomen and causing injuries from which he died in a few days. Before his death he was deserted by all his attendants, who stole and carried off even the coverings of the bed on which he lay. The body remained on the floor of the room in which the King died for two days before it was buried by charitable monks from a neighboring monastery.

William Rufus was killed by an arrow, either accidental or with murderous intent. He died in the New Forest, his body was stripped by tramps, and the next day was found by a charcoal burner, who placed the naked corpse on his cart, hoping to receive a reward. On the way to Winchester the cart was upset and the King's body fell in the mire. Covered with filth and black with charcoal it arrived in Winchester, where it was buried in the Cathedral. A few years later the tower fell and crushed the tomb, and 600 years after the Puritans rifled the grave and played foot-ball with the King's skull.—Globe-Democrat.

Lady Henry Was Curious.

When Lady Somerset first came to America, she was particularly anxious to become acquainted with all the American customs and to take part in everything American. Her appreciation of America was intense.

"Now, will you tell me," said she one day to a friend, "why the chestnut has been selected as a national nut, and why it is so dear to the hearts of every one? I notice that all, be they old or young, boy or girl, man or woman, speak of the chestnut frequently, and always pleasantly, and even affectionately.

"To-day, as I was seated in one of your horse cars, a little boy began telling another one some short anecdote, when suddenly the other little boy sprang to his feet and shouted, 'Oh, chestnuts!' Later in the day I saw one man whisper something in the ear of a friend, to which the friend only replied, 'Oh, what a chestnut!'

"How pleasant to have something of which every one is so fond. But explain the cause of the liking. Why was that particular nut selected? Why not the almond or the pecan? Is it that the chestnut grows more freely here?"—New York World.

An Elephant's Fear of a Mouse.

One of the keepers of the Zoo, whose experience with the larger animals has been quite varied, in speaking of the elephant, said: "While it has no fear of the powerful Bengal tiger or the Numidian lion, at the first sight of the most diminutive creature it will shrink from it and tremble all over from the most abject fear. I remember well, years ago, one of the largest and most brutal elephants we had in the Zoological Garden, while feeding one day in its quarters, discovered a mouse which was lunching in a corner on some of the provender, and the scare it gave to the elephant and the way it shook and carried on for a few minutes was a sight to look at. The mouse seemed entirely composed in the presence of such a mastodon, and satisfied its appetite fully before retiring. The elephant gave its lilliputian visitor a wide berth during its stay.—Philadelphia Press.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....DECEMBER 22, 1892.

BLAINE has been lying at the point of death for about a week, and may die any day.

THE report of the secretary of agriculture, just received, speaks hopefully of the coming use of Indian corn in Europe. Mills in several cities over there, have bought machinery in the United States, so as to grind the corn themselves. Secretary, Jerry Rusk says he supposes they do this, as their government has put heavy duty on ground meal, making it an object for the millers to import corn whole and grind it themselves. But he forgets, that, all during the late campaign, he and his party have been claiming that a duty made the article cheaper, and that in any case the foreigner paid the duty. In this case, we, the Americans would have to pay the duty on the corn we send to Germany, while to the Germans themselves it would be made cheaper. Mr. Rusk should stop and think a little.

That Was a Pleasant Surprise.

It perhaps is no startling assertion, when it is said that no man living in Auburn, has a wider range of acquaintanceship in DeKalb county, than Rev. W. L. Meese. Having traveled over the territory for years in the capacity of an evangelist, he is known far and near by old and young, as being a kindly disposed and evenly tempered old gentleman;—always the same, with a good word and a gentle smile for all. His energies and personal attention have been to the good of suffering humanity, thus endearing him to the hearts of his countrymen. Everybody seems to have an inward feeling of reverence toward him, and his reputation as a man of earnest piety carries with it a hallowed serenity wherever he goes. However, his confidence and interest in his fellow-men oftimes makes him the innocent dupe of their kindly caprices, because of their delight in taking advantage of his unsuspecting nature. It was one these well-planned surprises and cunningly devised schemes that brought him and his estimable wife unsuspectingly into a snare long set for them. This is how it all came about:

Mr. Meese, like everybody else, is subject to a birthday once a year. Mrs George Werntz, of the Junction, perceived this and during the Auburn fair, made it a special point to learn when that most important event would occur. Having thus obtained the information that the victim of her research would be sixty-four years of age, Dec. 16, 1892, her woman's wit and ingenuity, coupled with the favorable inclinations of the good sisters, a reception was prepared for "Uncle Billy," of which he was kept utterly ignorant. Though three long months lagged wearily by, at last came the eventful day! The good people down there wanted some preaching; so Mr. and Mrs. M, went without even a thought that he was 64 years old that day. But lo and behold! they were soon in the midst of a gay surprise party!

They returned with an abundance of provisions and some money. Happiness supreme, was the transport of the hour, and Brother Meese thanks the friends heartily for their affectionate remembrance of him.

Quality High, Prices Low.

"Quality low and prices high" never yet built up a prosperous business. "Quality high and prices high" is not the true principle either. "Quality low and prices low" may give a customer value received, but leads to dissatisfaction in the long run. "Quality high and prices low" controls the market everywhere, and secures the patronage of the public. It is the secret of the great success that has attended all of the establishments of the Foster Furniture and Carpet Co., located at Ft. Wayne, Lafayette and Terre Haute, in Indiana, and at Jackson Mich. They ship goods free to all points within seventy-five miles of either of their stores. They give you at each place one acre of furniture and carpets to select from. Newest designs, best made goods and lowest prices.

Mr. J. B. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

On Deck Once More

and ready to do business is the latest announcement of John Kruger. Everybody knows John, and they especially recognize the fact that when he says business, he means it. Well, John is not dead yet, and for that reason he has not ceased to be a benefit to his fellows. He has gone into business again! His short retirement from business has been the means of brightening his ideas for something still better than ever before. His store room, for a time occupied by Henry Shoemaker, is now filled chock full with a bran new stock of goods, fresh and nice. No old goods or special introductory bargains! Everything up to date! Frank Hoff bought the remainder of Mr. Shoemaker's stock, so none those goods will be on the shelves. John Kruger Sr. and John L Kruger Jr., will be the head of this new firm. All their old customers as well as the public at large, are cordially invited to call at the old stand.

End of Volume XXII.

Next week, volume twenty-two of the COURIER closes. What a good time it would be for all who owe a year, or two years, to remember the old reliable paper that for twenty years has been taken, each week, to the postoffice and sent out. That means that this paper has been carried to the office 1144 times, besides the odd 53 numbers that will happen as it did last year. Yes, we would like to get our accounts as nearly square as we can. But if a man is hard up, we will not press him. Yet there are some who are not trying to pay, and with such, we shall have to make other arrangements, for we cannot carry on our books, such as do not mean to pay. Now at the holidays will be a good time for distant subscribers to send in their postal notes, etc., and proper credit will be given. None of these hints are for our friends who are already closely paid up, but a gentle reminder for those who are "in the rear."

Court,

Work began for the December term on Monday when Judge Powers and Prosecutor Butler came down from Angola. They found the court room all fixed up and made neat and clean, and a good deal of the furniture newly varnished. There is also a storm door in the hall on the second floor and things made handy generally. Eli Cochran is made grand jury bailiff and D. D. Metcalf is court room bailiff. Sheriff Ralston and Deputy Blum, are kept busy at outside work a good deal of the time. Clerk Moody takes charge of the office in the front room and is getting so he can say "Youdosolemlyswearthat theevidenceyougive shallbethewholetruth and nothing butthe truthsohelpyouGod" as glibly as a veteran.

The Herblashimer provoke case is dismissed. The case of state vs Wetzel, for assault with intent to kill he is under $1000 bonds with John Treesh as security to appear when needed. Wilson vs Miller, partition, is dimissed as land had not been sold. The divorce case of Watson vs Watson is dismissed. D. Hook vs C. E. VanAuken ordered off docket till called up by interested party. Indiana Machine Co. vs Joseph Imler, account, plaintiff gets $308. Chaffe divorce case dimissed, as was also the case of Jackson Emerick vs Emerick heirs. Jones vs Grand Rapids road is set for March 15. Jacob Kahn vs Samuel Fulks, dismissed. Anna Hasbuck was divorced from Peter. John Edgar Buchanan was admitted to the bar to practice law in this court. Grand jury is working on state cases now. J. W. McKay is on in place of John Treesh, and John Williams in place of Edison Daniels. No court next week, but all hands will be on deck the week after.

Stop-over Privileges Discontinued.

To avoid manipulation and illegitimate use of its tickets, the Wabash Railroad Company has found it necessary to discontinue the granting of stop-over privileges on all kinds and classes of tickets, and after January 1st, 1893, passengers will be obliged to purchase tickets from point to point. The new arrangement, however, which will be fully explained by any of the Company's Agents, will be found to be equally as convenient to the traveling public as the old, while the Company will be enabled to protect itself from imposition.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, Administratrix of the estate of George H. Duncan, deceased, late of said county.

Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

JANE DUNCAN, Administratrix.

Resolutions of Respect.

We the committee appointed to draft resolutions of respect and condolence to the memory of our beloved sister, Mrs. Mary Swisher, beg leave to submit the following:

Once more the silent messenger of death has entered our corps and taken from our midst our beloved sister Mrs Mary Swisher, by which our order has lost one of its most efficient and devoted workers. And truly it can be said of her that her work was well done and she was still lingering on the shores of time anxiously awaiting to be relieved from her suffering here God gave her a view of the Paradise of rest where the charter is never draped in mourning therefore be it,

Resolved: That in the death of sister Swisher, the husband has lost a kind companion, the children a loving mother and the community a faithful friend, and that we will cherish her memory and extend to the family our heartfelt sympathies

Resolved: That in our respect for her our charter be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days those beautiful, beautiful hands!

As they pressed my aching brow,
They cooled the fever and eased the pain;
Methinks I can feel them now.

Oh, those beautiful, beautiful hands!
I stood by her coffin one day,
And I kissed those hands so cold and white,
As quiet and peacefully she lay.

Oh, those beautiful, beautiful hands!
I shall clasp them again once more,
As my feet touch the banks of the heavenly land,
We shall meet on that shining shore.

"Fry your doughnuts while you wait," might be the motto at Ed. Baker's bakery. The other day a hungry customer came in, on his way to dinner, and asked for doughnuts. Chris Bauer, who does the baking, replied that they had none. Then noticing the look of disappointment on his customer's face, he added, "Just wait a moment and I'll make you some" The customer was in a hurry, but on Chris' assurance that they would be ready in two minutes, he sat down and waited. The two minutes were just drawing to a close, when the doughnuts, steaming hot, were handed him, and he went home and had his favorite food for dinner. It was a case of "Fry 'em while you wait."

If a comet meet a planet scooting through the sky—if a comet hit a planet need a planet cry?

Biela's comet evidently judged that this country had trouble enough this year and lit out into space.

It is a duty to think of and for others, in small things as well as in great, to study their feelings, to cultivate sympathy, forbearance, good-will and tenderness.

A Buffalo coroner has been holding an inqnest on the unearthed bones of a lot of Indians whose tribe became extinct over 200 years ago. The verdict was "good injun."

Self-denial does not belong to religion as characteristic of it; it belongs to human life; the lower nature must always be denied when you are trying to rise to a higher sphere.

"Snolligoster" is not a new word, unless the duration of an average lifetime counts for nothing in the age of a word. It certainly came into being before "skedaddle" did, and is, perhaps, fully as expressive and musical.

Mrs. Langtry will send a three-feet-high doll, fashioned to be a miniature model of herself, to the Chicago Exposition. It is the knowledge that such works of art will be on view at the great show which will attract crowds of visitors to Chicago.

New York dealers recently bought more than 42,000 barrels of Kentucky whisky. Lest there be some misunderstanding as to the use which New York proposes to make of this liquor, the Press states that it is intended for medicinal purposes only.

Bishop Newman says that "from the foundation of our Government the Sabbath day has been regarded as an American institution." It certainly was not an American institution for the 1,500 years between the birth of Christ and the celebrated transoceanic expedition of Mr. Columbus.

"If you contemplate going to the World's Fair," suggests the Memphis Appeal-Avalanche, "take a tent, a quantity of pemmican, corned beef and Liebig's extract, and a gondola. In this way you will be independent of the hotel-keepers and hackmen of Chicago." But you will have to pay 50 cents, mark you, to get into the grounds. You can't escape altogether.

An expert mathematician has been figuring on football, which is apparently becoming the principal study at most of our colleges. He says the energy displayed in the average game, if applied to the plow, would "break up twenty acres of the heaviest soil known in the country." No time should be lost in sending this information to the fathers of the young gentlemen students.

A "regular" surgeon writing in a gilt-edged journal of surgery maintains the utility of caustic pastes of arsenic or zinc for treating cancerous tumors, and even prefers them to the knife, which calls forth from the Medical Record this comment: "We are brought by Dr. Robinson back to the treatment of our fathers, and, we may add, of many successful quacks." Query: Is a quack one who holds fast to that which is good while others chase after false gods?

Prof. Huxley thinks that results often attributed to overwork are sometimes due to under oxygenation, and consequent accumulation of waste matter which operates as a poison. "The depression of overworked organizations is very commonly the operation of some physiological candle stuff not properly burned." Those who have kept track of our article on autotoxæmia will see that Prof. Huxley's idea is in full agreement with our own.

Of all the humbugs which demoralize this suffering world there are none worse than the gas and electric lighting registers. They are simple things on their face, but the amount of lying which they do makes Satan appear a paragon of truthfulness. It doesn't matter to them whether gas is burned or not; they go calmly ahead making it appear that customers never extinguish the lights at all, and upon the damnable record which they make the public has to pay.

So far as the footpads, burglars and highwaymen of Chicago are concerned, they are having things so easy at present that there cannot be much excitement for them. A sure thing takes the life out of any business. If the police would vary the monotony of killing and clubbing innocent men by breaking the head of a thief occasionally, existence in that town would take on a livelier aspect. Even the "well-known criminal" must find the sort of thing now in vogue very dispiriting.

If a President of the United States should suddenly decide that he would like to give some festivities at the White House, at which every guest should be costumed in the dress of the time of Washington, he would very soon be criticised for extravagance, and if he asked for an appropriation for the purpose, he couldn't get it. But Emperor Wilhelm has just ordered his whole court of several hundred persons to turn into imitations of the Prussians of Frederick the Great's time, and no one dares to open his lips against the folly.

The proposition to make the gramme the unit of weight for gold coinage raises the question, "What is a gramme?" It is the one-thousandth part of the French weight, which is equal to 2.2046 avoirdupois pounds of 7,000 grains each. Therefore, it contains 15.432 grains, and the 23.22 grains of pure gold in the American dollar are equal to 1.505, or a trifle over one and a half grammes. And this suggests a point recently made to the effect that it is not well to shorten the spelling of the word to "gram," for the reason that the word thus shortened is easily confounded with the word "grain."

They teach the art of cooking in Philadelphia public schools, and a class of ten girls, under the direction of a teacher, cooked a dinner in sight of the crowd of visitors at the food exhibition in that city last week. The dinner consisted of the following dishes: Tomato soup, scalloped mutton, tomato sauce, mashed potatoes, stewed celery and floating island. It took the girls fifty-seven minutes to prepare the dinner, including the time taken in cleaning up the dishes and utensils. The food was then passed around, and all who dared to venture tasted it and pronounced it good. There are objections to making the public schools a vehicle for all classes of manual instruction, but if girls cannot be taught how to cook in their own homes, it is better that they should learn in school than nowhere. Few things connected with daily life are of such importance.

The latest Boston science is oekology. The derivation of the term is evident. It is from the Greek oikos, meaning a house, and the familiar termination, logy, from logos. Hence we have, then, household science. Thus is housekeeping, with its various departments, lifted among the learned pursuits. It will rank hereafter with philology, mineralogy, physiology, and archæology. We may now look for the establishment of a chair of oekology in Yale, with lectures on such subjects as: History of the Flapjack, How to Make a Bed, Early Forms of the Tea Biscuit, Condensation as Applied to Fats, etc. Graduates of the course will be known as O. B., O. M. or O. D., bachelor, master or doctor of oekology, as the case may be. It is strongly suspected that the new science is a device of the old maids of New England to create a matrimonial boom, if possible. The status of feminine learning can be kept at its present elevated level, but the degrees of the fair graduates, instead of being a matrimonial handicap, will become a recommendation. It will be said of a learned Bostonian, she is a distinguished oekologist, and the men, instead of shuddering, as they do at present, will flock eagerly about her. Much has been done of late to reconcile religion with science. If a successful scheme has now been hatched to make our intellectual women proficient in household duties, a marked improvement in the religious status of men will be an immediate result.

A Remarkable Lighthouse.

One of the most wonderful lighthouses in the world is that at Minot's Ledge, near Boston. Its history has been one of romance. The greater part of its foundation is under water at low tide. In 1847 a skeleton lighthouse of iron was erected there on iron piles placed in holes drilled in the rock. A furious hurricane burst upon the coast in April, 1851, and anxious watchers from the Cohasset shore thought the structure had been carried away. But, as the sun sank, out shone the light across the storm-tossed waters. At 10 p. m. the light was seen for the last time. At one hour after midnight the fog bell was heard above the roaring of the breakers. At daybreak the ocean was a blank; the lighthouse was gone. Knowing that no help could reach them, the keepers had lighted their lamp as a warning to others, and their lives had gone out with it.

A granite tower now occupies the spot. So difficult was it to lay the foundation in the surf that only thirty hours' work could be done during the first year, but the tower stands to-day as enduring as the ledge itself—an isolated pile of stone amid the waves, by the force of which it is swayed like a tree in the wind. During the long winter months all communication with the land is shut off. In summer the occasional visitor is hoisted into the lighthouse from his boat by means of a chair, and from time to time a skiff is lowered by pulleys to convey one or another of the five keepers to the shore. The life tells on them frightfully. Several of them have been removed because they have gone insane, and more than one has attempted suicide.

WAGES ARE GOING UP.

FACTS FOR HIGH-TARIFFITES TO READ.

Able Journals Say Expeditious Measures Should Be Taken to Stop the Tariff Robbery—Evidences that the People Are With the Incoming Administration.

All Since the Election.

The McKinley bill took effect in October, 1890. It had full sway until November 8th, 1892—two years and two months—when two-thirds of the American people got sick and tired of "McKinley prosperity." During this period more than 1,000 wage reductions occurred in protected industries. The Reform Club of New York published 500 last July, and now has about 500 more ready to add to the list, and it is probable that the ground has not yet been half covered.

Anxious to show that the McKinley wage-advancing bill was not a complete farce, the protectionists made desperate efforts last summer to find cases of wage advances. Circulars were sent out to protected manufacturers. Twenty-eight reported advances, and the American Economist printed the list with a great flourish. Their joy was of short duration. The Reform Club quickly obtained the facts in each case. These showed that wages had actually been reduced in about half of the cases. In the four or five cases where advances had occurred, they were due entirely to the demands of effective labor organizations. The McKinley bill as a wage-advancer was not a "howling success."

On Nov. 8, the course of human events struck a snag and reversed its wheels. A few of the protected manufacturers, notably Carnegie, Frick & Co. and the Pottstown Iron Company, have gone on reducing wages just as if the election had not occurred. But generally, the downward tendency has been checked and an upward tendency is manifest. Here are some of the advances reported by the Associated Press:

Lowell, Mass., Nov. 15.—At a meeting of the agents of the Lowell cotton mills it was decided to grant an increase, not to exceed 7 per cent., in the wages of operatives, to take effect Dec. 4.

Boston, Nov. 15.—The owners of the Carpenter Mills, at Providence, to-day voted to raise the wages of their employes 15 per cent., without demand.

The owners of the Goddard Mills, the Lonsdale Company, and the B. B. & D. Knights, the largest cotton mills in the world, to-day announce a voluntary increase, hinted to be between 6 and 7 per cent.

Wheeling, W. Va., Nov. 16.—Thomas Mears, proprietor of the largest keg and barrel factory in this part of the country, to-day notified his men of an advance in wages of 10 per cent. all around.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 17.—The Blackstone Manufacturing Co., cotton manufacturers, of Blackstone, Mass., today posted notice that they will advance wages Dec. 5.

Providence, R. I., Nov. 17.—All the cotton mills in the State will follow the lead of the two big firms and increase wages at an early date. The Messrs. Goddard are still undecided whether to make the advance 7 or 10 per cent. There is the greatest rejoicing among the operatives.

Lowell, Mass., Nov. 18.—The carpet corporation followed the lead of the cotton mills to-day and raised wages 7 per cent., beginning Dec. 5.

Rockford, Ill., Nov. 20.—The Mechanics' Furniture Co., which employs a large number of hands, posted notices on Saturday evening that, beginning with Monday, there would be a general advance in wages.

Providence, R. I., Nov. 20.—Four more Rhode Island cotton mills have posted notices of increased wages, to take effect the first week in December, while one factory grants an increase on Dec. 1, and another on Jan. 1.

Greensburg, Pa., Nov. 26.—The packers in the United States Glass Company's works were last week notified that their hours of work would be lessened from ten to nine hours per day, and wages raised from $12 to $13, beginning with Monday, Nov. 21. It is thought the change will be made in all the fifteen factories of the company.

Lowell, Mass., November.—Lowell spinners want 10 per cent. increase instead of 7 per cent., that is to go into effect shortly.

Providence, R. I.—The increase of the J. & P. Coates Co., Limited, at Pawtucket, will be from 10 to 15 per cent. in all departments.

Within less than one month after the McKinley bill was frost-bitten, more genuine advances in protected industries have come to the surface, of their own accord, than all the Republicans could dig up in two years of strict McKinley rule. Perhaps the American Economist may care to investigate as to the accuracy of these strange phenomena.

Unchecked Prosperity in Woolens and Cottons.

How little business was affected by the last election, or landslide, and how smoothly and prosperous it has been since, is evident to those who read trade journals and reports. The new mills going up and the enlargements being made even in protected industries, where there is a strong probability that the protection will soon be lessened or abolished, have been so numerous and conspicuous as to almost completely silence the Republican "calamity howlers," who, two months ago, saw only ruin ahead if this country should elect Cleveland and declare for "free trade." The "scare" now is largely confined to the politicians, who are afraid that their evil predictions will not come true. Because of good crops in 1890 and 1891, and unusually high prices in 1890, and in spite of the McKinley bill, we were enjoying prosperity before election; for the same reasons and because of the prospect for free wool, coal, ores, etc., and in spite of evil predictions of some Republicans and a few attempts to close mills, reduce wages and charge it to the result of the election, we are still prosperous. Here is a sample of the pictures in trade papers. The American Wool and Cotton Reporter, a limited protectionist journal, has a column (or columns) each week, headed, "Bulletin of New Enterprises." These contain a list of "New Mills" and a list of "Enlargements and Improvements" in cotton and woolen mills. The number of mentions made are an index of the degree of prosperity in this industry.

The following are taken at random:

1892		New Mills.	Enlargements.	Total.

Not a Bad Programme.

Certain bills have been passed by the House for the relief of industry and lowering of taxes. Certain others of like kind are ready to be reported. These bills have been maturely considered and carefully framed. In their preparation close attention has been given to the conditions of the industries likely to be affected by them.

It is the desire of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to pass the remaining bills of this class through the House at this session, in order that the new Congress, in an extra session, may promptly enact them into laws, leaving the further work of tariff reform to be considered at leisure during the recess and completed at the regular session next year.

The enactment of these bills would not work a satisfactory reform of the tariff, but it would be a long and helpful step in that direction. It would give free raw materials to our manufacturers and cheaper goods to the people.

As there is nothing in any of these bills which must not be a part of any general bill that may be framed, there would seem to be no valid objection to their separate passage at the extra session, without waiting for the laborious preparation of a general reform measure. Such, at least, is the view taken by many of the leading men in the House.

They urge in support of it another consideration. The passage of these bills in the spring would give to the country the most pressingly needed parts of the reform as early as next fall, and leave a whole year between that time and the next Congressional elections for their benefits to appear. It is argued with force that a year's experience of free raw materials, enlarged markets for our products and cheaper goods for the people would dispel whatever remains of apprehension as to the effects of a more liberal policy and convert tariff reform from a party proposal into a national policy approved of all the people.

Stop the Robbery at Once!

That there should be more than one opinion among Democratic leaders on the subject of a special session is surprising to the Herald, which believes it cannot be mistaken in the sentiment held by the people toward the McKinley tariff. They have twice condemned that tariff as a monstrous wrong. They rejected it overwhelmingly in 1890, when it was fresh from the hands of its makers. In 1892, after they had unwillingly given it a two years' trial, they repudiated it still more emphatically. They have twice demanded its repeal, and they have commissioned the Democratic party with power and instructions to strike every line of the infamous law from the statute books.

It is difficult to exercise patience toward those who talk in this connection about the dangers of "hasty" action. The protective tariff is a burden and a crime. Is a peace officer expected to act with "great deliberation and delay" when he discovers a helpless victim in the grasp of a highwayman? Should he go at once to the assistance of the unfortunate victim or should he summon his fellow officers and consult as to the best means of preventing the robbery, meanwhile permitting the thief to continue undisturbed his work of spoliation? There is but one way in which honest people would answer these questions.

The Democratic party cannot act with too much expedition in the work of reforming the tariff. An act repealing the McKinley bill and arranging the tariff schedules on a revenue basis should be passed as soon as possible after the 4th of March. It is not necessary that the new act should, in all of its features, go into effect at once, but its prompt passage by Congress is essential as a guarantee that the Democratic leaders intend to keep faith with the people.—Chicago Herald.

The Cartridge Trust Trembles.

The New York Tribune of Nov. 18 announced, under the heading, "Business Men Canceling Contracts," that "The Union Metallic Cartridge Company say they also will feel the effects of the change."

They certainly will, if the twice expressed wishes of the American people are respected by the Fifty-third Congress. This is one of the principal cartridge companies in the Cartridge Trust, as miserable a specimen of "our protection" era as now exists, and it has hundreds of competitors. Protected by a duty of 45 per cent., it has for years been selling cartridges cheaper to foreigners than to Americans. But this is an ordinary proceeding with protected trusts. It is also common for trusts to raise or sustain prices. Few, if any, however, have been able to advance prices about 100 per cent. above fair prices and to sustain them there for ten years, as this trust has done. Here are the changes that have been made in prices of leading styles since May, 1883, when the trust was formed:

	May, 1883.	Dec., 1883.	Since Dec., 1890.
22 cal., long	1.44	2.16	2.57
32 cal., short	2.16	3.60	4.28
32 cal., long	2.43	4.14	4.98

No Sugar Duty.

We notice that two or three of our contemporaries commend the proposition made by one or two Democratic members of Congress, that the old duties on sugar should again be imposed. The effect of such legislation would be to increase the price of sugar to consumers generally by at least 2 cents a pound. We do not believe that this propsition will find favor with even a small minority of those who will control the next House. It deserves no support whatever. The Fifty-third Congress will not begin its work of revising the tariff by increasing the cost of the necessaries of life.—New York Times.

Protection and Monopoly on Top.

The following delicious bit of irony from the Iron Age of Dec. 1 recalls the riotous times before protection and monopoly were given a black eye on Nov. 8. It is the last chapter of a story begun when McKinley made his tariff bill. No more such stories will be begun in the new era now opening:

At a meeting of the former strikers of the Beaver Falls mills of the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, at Beaver Falls, Pa., held last week, a circular was issued, an extract of which reads as follows: "Assistant roller, reduced from $9 to $6.40 per day; engineer on No. 1 engine, reduced from $2.64 to $2.25 per day; water tenders, reduced from $2.50 to $2.25; firemen, reduced from $2.10 to $1.80; engineer on big engine, reduced from $2.85 to $2.75, his helper reduced 15 cents a day. The heaters have to work three furnaces for 27 cents, where they should receive 36 cents per ton. These are facts susceptible of proof, and there should be no statements that are not based on facts. To all our friends who have stood by us we return our earnest thanks. To those who have tried to defeat us, and have succeeded in doing it, we say we want no apologies, and we want them to glory in their victory."

"Going to the Dogs."

The Carpet Trade—Everything looks favorable now for a lively spring trade and at good prices.

In extra supers several Philadelphia lines, notably those of Ivins, Deitz & Magee, have been advanced 5 cents.

In Brussels the Lowells, Bigelows, and Victorias show no advance as yet. In some of the intermediate grades, however, there has been an advance of 5 cents. Rumor has it that Alexander Smith, Sons & Co. will advance the price on tapestry 2½ cents right through the line.

Moquettes are a puzzling feature. Some in the trade say that it looks now as if they would advance.

In ingrains the advance of 2½ cents will be general. Some of the finer fabrics, as the Tremonts, for example, will advance five cents. The general feeling in the trade as to the prospects of spring business is very good.—American Wool and Cotton Reporter, Dec. 1, 1892.

Harrison's Message.

It is a message which will have as much influence on legislation as last year's almanac—no more.—Providence Telegram.

We must allow something for the animus of a defeated partisan. His arguments are the result of his desires.—Atlanta Constitution.

In short, the dominant tone of the message is one of petulant defiance, such as can be recalled in no previous public document of its class.—Philadelphia Times.

Mr. Harrison gives his party no suggestion of recognition. He has nothing around which to call a rally of his disheartened followers.—Kansas City Times.

Mr. Harrison is a man of great intelligence and profound attainments, and it is immeasurably discouraging to hear him repeat the stale formula of the protectionist at this hour.—St. Paul Globe.

This is a gratuitous performance, as nobody has denied that the country has prospered, though the Democratic party maintains that it has not prospered as it should have prospered, with its manifold natural advantages.—Rochester Herald.

And then, with an expression of regret that the work of revising the tariff must be delayed at least three months—becanse the threat of great tariff changes disturbs business and production—he deliberately recommends that the whole subject be left to the incoming Congress.—Detroit Free Press.

It is hardly in keeping with the dignity, not of the defeated candidate of a political party, but of the chief magistrate of the people, to use his privilege of official communication to Congress to assail the wisdom of the people's action or to sneer at their declared purposes.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

It is inordinately long. In tone it is melancholy and in parts peevish. It is more of a defense of the position the administration has held to during the past two years of its economic debauch, and therefore, without intending to do so, furnishes a justification of the Democratic victory.—New Haven Register.

The message adheres to the old-time policies of the Republican party throughout, including a recommendation for further subsidies and a still further enlargement of the pension rolls. It would have been gratifying to the whole country if Mr. Harrison had broadened out in response to the recent verdict of the people in national affairs, and such an example would have been of great value to the politicians.—Kansas City Star.

Having stated that the horse was seventeen feet high, the President, now that he has just taken a tumble from the hurricane deck of the beast, sticks more stubbornly than ever to that opinion, and backs it up by such authorities as Census Superintendent Porter and Labor Commissioner Peck. He shows that we have a great, glorious and growing country and endeavors to show that for these blessings we are more indebted to a protective tariff than to a kindly providence.—Louisville Times.

President Harrison certainly deserves credit for the sturdy and bold demeanor with which he faces the overwhelming defeat of his party and the complete condemnation of his official administration. He makes no apologies, offers no excuse, and seeks to condone no mistakes. He does not admit, even by implication, that any mistakes were made, but he calmly undertakes the task of vindicating the policy which has met such an overpowering repudiation.—New Orleans Picayune.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Lawmakers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The House Wednesday, after one hour's debate, passed the army appropriation bill practically without amendment. This heads the procession of the appropriation bills of the second session of the LIId Congress. The publication of 10,000 copies of the President's annual message was ordered. The famous McGarrahan claim occupied the attention of the Senate up to 2 o'clock, but finally went over till Thursday without action. The anti-option bill was taken up and Mr. George resumed his speech in favor of it. Mr. George spoke for over two hours, but had not finished when he yielded for other business. The anti-option bill went over without action. The resolution offered by Mr. Daniel calling for information on the subject of the civil service was taken up and agreed to.

A very strong presentation in favor of the claimant in the famous McGarrahan case was made in the Senate Thursday by Mr. Hunton (Va.). The morning hour expired before the argument was concluded and the bill went over, without action. Mr. George brought to a close his three-day speech in favor of the anti-option bill, and Mr. Washburn made a determined but fruitless effort to have a day fixed for a vote upon it. The Senate adjourned until Monday. The House agreed to a resolution for a holiday recess from Thursday before Christmas until Wednesday after New Year's. A bill relative to bills of lading was passed. A bill was passed to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory. The House adjourned until Saturday.

Few of the very few members in attendance in the House Saturday paid any attention to the proceedings. The Committee on Military Affairs succeeded in passing a few bills of minor importance. The day was consumed in the consideration of a Florida claim bill and the House adjourned without action upon it. The Florida bill involves an appropriation of $500,000, but only ten members took enough interest in the matter to vote on the question of sending it to the committee of the whole. The claim is for expenses incurred in the Seminole war, 1855–'57. According to Mr. Dingley, there were but ninety-six Seminoles engaged in the outbreak. Congress had already paid to the persons who had put down the outbreak $800 per Indian, and now proposed to pay them $2,000 per Indian additional.

Phil Armour's Gift.

THIS is a wise use of surplus money, and some of our local millionaires might do worse than follow Mr. Armour's example.—New York Sun.

CHICAGO is to be congratulated on this very handsome piece of wisdom and benevolence on the part of one of her citizens.—Brooklyn Times.

CHICAGO and its people appear to be getting their full share of the good things of life, but who shall say they are not deserved.—Troy Times.

MR. ARMOUR describes his religion in a characteristic way. It contains, he says, sixteen ounces to the pound. Religion like that has the proper weight.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

THE benefits that will accrue to the people of Chicago from the institution so liberally endowed by Mr. Armour are likely to exceed in value all they will derive from the World's Fair, great as are their expectations in this line.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

THIS is an age of great wealth, but it is also an age of great charities and great public benefactions through means of accumulated wealth. The rich men of this country have added much to the advancement and the comforts of the people.—Iowa State Register.

MR. ARMOUR has been at work quietly on this enterprise for a year or more. He did not wait to die, but gave away a considerable portion of his wealth while living that he might direct the handling of it. Other milloniares should not be slow to follow Mr. Armour's noble example.—Richmond States.

"PHIL" ARMOUR is very modest about his donation of practically $3,000,000 to found and maintain a training school and mission at Chicago. He merely says that the thing has been done and that's all there is to it. Mr. Armour's gift is a handsome one, and his manner of making it is as handsome as his gift. —Indianapolis Sentinel.

HE has made millions of money in the prosecution of his business, but his munificent gift to the working classes of Chicago shows that he appreciates the need of such an institution and is willing to furnish it at his own expense. Would that there were more Phil Armours, not alone in Chicago, but elsewhere.—Lincoln State Journal.

Mr. Gould's death simply removes a disturbing element in the financial world—an element whose influence was far-reaching, powerful, and always used selfishly.—Wheeling Register.

We say that the late Mr. Gould cannot be entirely condemned for becoming rich. If his fault needs explanation it can be given by the balance in favor of the prosperity his railroad improvements created.—Columbus Dispatch.

IN the United States District Court at Philadelphia, the cases of four mail wagon drivers, convicted of stealing packages that they were conveying from the postoffice to mail trains, have been disposed of as follows: Charles Shocks, $2,000 fine and two years and six months; John Hooper, $2,000 fine and two years; Richard Dixon, $2,000 fine and two years; and James Hirst, who turned State's evidence, $200 and one year.

Making Billiard-Balls.

The manufacturer of billiard-balls from celluloid and bonsilate is a peculiar industry from the fact that the only factory of the kind in the world is in this city. A large proportion of the balls now made are of celluloid, but only for the reason that the machinery is not as well adapted to the manufacture of bonsilate balls. The time will come, however, when all balls will be made of the latter material. The celluloid, which is received in large white sheets, is first cut into small square pieces about five-eighths of an inch in size. These are placed into molds, previously heated by steam to the proper temperature. They are then placed in the hydraulic presses, and with a pressure of from 1,500 to 2,000 pounds to the square inch are roughly molded, heat at the same time being applied. The various positions of the blocks in the mold give the ball the peculiar mottled appearance when finished. Experiments have been made by grinding the celluloid to a powder, and using it in that form, but nothing has succeeded so well as the present method. After being taken from the molds the balls are turned absolutely sphericel by an exceedingly ingenious device.

The processes in the manufacture of bonsilate balls are quite different in many respects. The material is placed in the molds in powder, and the balls, after being roughly pressed up, considerably larger than the required size, are covered with rubber and tin-foil to prevent the material from being injured by water, and are then placed under water-pressure. By means of this, which is the only machine of the kind in existence, the balls are placed under a pressure of from 3,000 to 4,000 pounds to the square inch. The water touching the ball at every point, and the pressure being equally transmitted, the result is a perfectly pressed sphere, of just the same specific gravity in one spot as in another. Without this apparatus the successful manufacture of billiard-balls from bonsilate would have been impossible. A simple but ingenious contrivance is also employed to ascertain when the balls are perfectly poised or balanced. They are first weighed and are then placed in a flat dish of mercury. This subtle fluid detects the slightest shade of inaccuracy, and the balls are put in the lathe and corrected till they are absolutely true. Not only billiard, but pool and bagatelle balls are made. The prices at which they are sold are far below those charged for ivory, ranging from $5.50 to $13.50 per set of four balls for billiards, and from $26 to $50 per set of sixteen balls for pool.—Albany Argus.

Absence of Mechanical Contrivances in Japan.

The whole of the manufacturing processes of Japan are conducted without the aid of any mechanical contrivances whatever, and with the simplest of tools. I do not think the country boasts a saw of sufficient length to cut through a large log of wood. The saw has the form of a butcher's chopper, and when it has cut well into the angle at the end of a log, the log is turned and work begun on the opposite side. By repeated turning, a plank is cut. The plane cuts pulling toward the workman, and so does the saw. I never saw a lathe with a continuous rotary motion, save in the Royal Arsenal, which is nothing more than a European workshop; and I never but once saw a labor-saving contrivance of any kind in the country. Rice is husked by being placed in a sort of mortar, into which a pestle falls. The pestle is attached to a horizontal piece of wood, supported by a fulcrum in the center. On the end opposite the pestle a man stands—thus the pestle is raised; but by his jumping off the pestle falls. By this repeated jumping on the end and jumping off, the process of husking the rice is accomplished. In the corner of a field I once saw one of these mills with a kind of bucket placed on the end of a beam, where the man would stand. A small water-spout coming from a hillside filled this bucket with water, when it raised the pestle; but the act of raising upset the water, and thus let the pestle fall. This, as I have just said, is the only machine that I ever saw in Japan, yet the productions of the country would lead me to infer that machinery of an advanced character must be common. Various forms of water-wheels are known, but during my travels I never saw one.—Japan, its Architecture, Art and Art Manufactures.

He declares it to be "the best remedy for cough and croup." Mr. D. T. Good, Columbia, Tenn., writes: "I keep Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in the house all the time. It is the best remedy for cough and croup I ever used."

THERE are a large number of hygienic physicians who claim that disease is always the result of a transgression of Nature's laws. The proprietors of Garfield Tea are both physicians, and have devoted years to teaching the people how to avoid sickness by following Nature's laws. They give away with every package of Garfield Tea a little book which they claim will enable all persons, if directions are followed, to avoid sickness of all kinds, and to have no need of Garfield Tea or any other medicine.

Glorious California.

The product of some California orchards are somewhat astonishing. For example, a sixteen-acre orchard of German prunes in Sonoma County, from five to eight years old, yielded 90,000 pounds of dried fruit this year and a net profit of $7,500.

SOME men act so much like calves that they ought to have a bell on.

ASTHMATIC TROUBLES and soreness of the Lungs or Throat are usually overcome by Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant—a sure curative for colds.

Joaquin Miller on Jay Gould.

I am tempted to give a little side incident of my last interview with Jay Gould and wrestle with Western Union on Wall street. I had seen the stock go down about eighteen points, and so bought 100. It fell five lower and I took 100 more. Five points lower, and I took another, and so on until I was getting alarmed. I thought Jay Gould under some obligations to me, or at least a true friend, and so stepped across from my hotel to see him. He was kind, quiet and purry as a kitten, almost playful, and soon began to point out on his maps the line of the new Atlantic cable. He himself opened the subject of telegraphs. The occasion was opportune. I handed him a certificate of purchase of Western Union and asked him what to do, as I was already on the edge of my margin. He looked at me with a sweet and innocent surprise, as if saying: "Only to think that any man would touch that worthless Western Union." "I am so sorry you have bought this stuff. My telegraph is the other line," he sighed at length. "Yes, I know. But I bought it because I thought it was cheap, Mr. Gould." "It is cheaper now, Mr. Miller." "And will it be cheaper, Mr. Gould?" "Well, we" looking at his son—"have not a share of it. It ought to be a great deal cheaper." "Then I shall sell twice the amount. I hold and hedge. Thank you, and good night." And the next morning I did sell—all right and left—for the whole bottom seemed to be falling out of Western Union. It kept on tumbling and by noon I was even. By 1 o'clock I was not only even, but almost rich. I was a richer man than I had ever been before. I remained a rich man about thirty-five minutes. The tide began to set against me. Western Union bounded up with a rapidity that fairly made me dizzy, and by the time the hammer fell in the Stock Board I literally had not car fare left. Having plenty of leisure after that I wrote down the foregoing conversation, and I have copied it here exactly. I have not seen Mr. Gould since. But I find that at the time he said he had not a share of Western Union he had about 200,000 shares, and was picking it up as fast as he could knock it down. Honor? I tell you that where phrenologists place the bumps of honor, there must be a cavity in the head of Jay Gould. Cavity? A regular Mammoth Cave.

His Mother's Pudding.

A man who did not keep in mind that in boyhood he ate his food with a better sauce than any cook ever invented, was in the habit—a habit said to be common—of making his wife uncomfortable by a too frequent reference to his mother's wonderful culinary skill.

Once, however, according to the Boston Transcript, which tells the story, he was put to silence for a few days at least.

"John," said his wife, "I wish you would tell me just how your mother made her plum-pudding. Then perhaps I could suit you."

"Why, she took some raisins and stirred 'em up with pudding, and baked it. That's all."

"But, John, real plum-pudding is boiled."

"Oh, of course. Mother always boiled it after she baked it."

Fish Story.

A shark recently washed ashore at Midian, British Columbia, had two distinct tails, three perfect eyes and what appeared to be the rudiment of a fin or flipper hanging to the under jaw.

A Herald of the Infant Year.

Clip the last thirty years or more from the century, and the segment will represent the term of the unbounded popularity of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The opening of the year 1893 will be signalized by the appearance of a fresh Almanac of the Bitters, in which the uses, derivation and action of this world-famous medicine will be lucidly set forth. Everybody should read it. The calendar and astronomical calculations to be found in this brochure are always astonishingly accurate, and the statistics, illustrations, humor and other reading matter rich in interest and full of profit. The Hostetter Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., publish it themselves. They employ more than sixty hands in the mechanical work, and more than eleven months in the year are consumed in its preparation. It can be obtained, without cost, of all druggists and country dealers, and is printed in English, German, French, Welsh, Norwegian, Swedish, Holland, Bohemian and Spanish.

Criticism Without Words.

A writer of plays was reading a new work before a company of the French Society of Comedy, and presently was disturbed by the sight of one of the members, M. Got, fast asleep.

The author stopped and reproved the sleeper. He was reading his play to the committee in order to obtain their opinion. How could a man who was asleep give an opinion?

M. Got rubbed his eyes and remarked: "Sleep is an opinion."

There was no appeal from this sententious verdict, but it is to be hoped that ministers who happen to read this story will not lay it too much to heart.

ROYAL

IS THE

Best Baking Powder

The Official Government Reports:

The United States Government, after elaborate tests, reports the ROYAL BAKING POWDER to be of greater leavening strength than any other. (Bulletin 13, Ag. Dep., p. 599.)

The Canadian Official Tests, recently made, show the ROYAL BAKING POWDER highest of all in leavening strength. (Bulletin 10, p. 16, Inland Rev. Dep.)

In practical use, therefore, the ROYAL BAKING POWDER goes further, makes purer and more perfect food, than any other.

Government Chemists Certify:

"The Royal Baking Powder is composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances.
"EDWARD G. LOVE, PH. D."

"The Royal Baking Powder is undoubtedly the purest and most reliable baking powder offered to the public.
"HENRY A. MOTT, M. D., PH. D."

"The Royal Baking Powder is purest in quality and highest in strength of any baking powder of which I have knowledge.
"WM. MCMURTRIE, PH. D."

The Government Report shows all other baking powders tested to contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid.

Massage for a Lion.

The African lion at the Zoo is now a source of anxiety to his keepers owing to a skin disease he has contracted and to his unwillingness to co-operate in all the measures adopted for his own cure. Every day the lion's cage is partially entered by a man armed with a long stick, at the end of which a saturated sponge is tied. With this the majestic beast receives a soothing course of friction. When the proceedings become monotonous the lion intimates his perception of the fact by a mighty rush at the keeper, who beats a hasty retreat. The mane has proved the most embarassing part of the animal to reach. A syringe is employed for this part of the treatment. He dashes at the iron bars whenever the keeper appears, but the king of beasts is being slowly cured in spite of himself.—Philadelphia Press.

Sale of Jokes.

Public Opinion, which has been investigating the joke business, says that a good original joke which is easily illustrated brings as high as $5. The magazines and papers which pay for their jokes have regular prices. Professional jokers send a supply of from ten to fifty jokes to the paper paying best, and the editor in charge of that department chooses those which suit him and send back the rest. These are then sent to the next best-paying publication, and so on until they reach the papers which pay but 50 cents. Such as are then returned the joker considers useless. A professional joker can make about 100 jokes a week, and as joke making must soon become a habit perhaps the brain is not too greatly tasked in their manufacture.

Tobacco in the Army.

Prof. Horsford tells of his efforts to secure tobacco for the army during the civil war. Upon visiting the camps at Fredericksburg and elsewhere and asking the soldiers what they most wished to complete their happiness, he received this reply, "Tobacco." "Why tobacco?" he asked. "Because if we sit down on a march and can have a little smoke it makes us think of home, and lulls our minds and cures the homesickness." The measure encountered much opposition in Congress and failed at first. But just after the war closed provision was made for a tobacco ration in the army supplies, and the soldiers still receive it.

In Great Britian it is illegal now to employ girls in shops under 18 for more than seventy-four hours a week, and shopkeepers who disobey the law are liable to be fined.

Interesting.

We learn now that the famous jubilee shot fired from a twenty-two-ton gun in Queen Victoria's jubilee year, to ascertain how far a shot could be carried, remained in the air sixty-nine and one-half seconds, and the highest point reached in its flight of twelve miles was 17,000 feet.

Glass Cloth.

The frizzled glass threads from which cloth is woven are said to surpass in fineness, not only the finest cotton, but even the thread of the silkworm's cocoon, their softness and elasticity being even greater than that of manufactured silk "lint."

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. THE REMARKABLE CURES

Of a noted Cincinnati Physician, formerly Professor in Medical College. Will give special attention to difficult cases that other physicians have failed to cure. BOTH MALE AND FEMALE.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnoses and wonderful cures border on that of a miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It costs nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free. A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided. The merchant mingles with the artisan in seeking relief at his hands and hundreds are cured every year.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Elmer E. Clark and Samuel C Teeters, are plaintiffs and Etna Kuhlman, James H. Mills, Nettie J. Mills, Tri-State Building and Loan Association of the City of Ft. Wayne, are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of Fifty-seven Dollars and Fifty Cents, with interest on said decree and cost, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to wit:

Lot number three [3] in block number seventy-four [74] in Keyser's Addition to the town of Garrett, situated in DeKalb County, State of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

G. C. RALSTON, Sheriff of DeKalb County, By R. Blum Deputy.

WATERLOO.

Mrs. Geo. Sinclair is at home on a visit, and Mr. Sinclair will come the last of the week.

Rev. Mr. Suman did not fill his appointment as usual Sunday evening on account of the success attending his meetings at Barker's Chapel.

Mr. Rhinesmith and wife who have been living at Hudson for some months, for convenience, as his business took him there, will return to this place, to the satisfaction of both.

The east half of Maple street is now lighted by new street lamps, the enterprise we suppose of private individuals. One is on the corner by E. Braun's; one by Rev. Klotz', and one by Royal Fisk's.

Friday of last week George Duncan brought over one of the twin babies recently born, for burial. Its life was short, but it has been spared much suffering and "it is well with the child."

The gentlemen members of the dance club, gave a dancing party Friday evening, Dec. 9th. Friday evening of this week the wives of these gentlemen and all the lady members will give a leap year dance.

Monday evening Prof. Gardner gave an exhibition in hypnotism, claiming he has wonderful power in this mystery. He promised two hours of solid fun, and as most people desire and require to be amused, no doubt he drew a full house.

The entertainment given by the young gentlemen and ladies of the high school, last week was generously patronized. The house was filled and every body pleased. On Friday evening the receipts were over thirty dollars and probably it was equaled Saturday by the crowd the young ladies drew.

The death of George Duncan last week was very sudden. He had eaten his supper, and only left the table, when he complained of feeling badly. His wife helped him to bed and sent for his son-in-law, Wm. Till who lived not far away. When he arrived Mr. D. could not speak, and continued in that condition until he died the following night at 10 o'clock. He was the father of Mrs. Wm. May until recently a resident of this place.

It is said Dell Locke and wife will soon remove to Decatur, Ind., to engage in the hotel business there. Mr. Locke leaves Saturday of this week, and Mrs. L. a week from that date. They have a host of friends here, and their departure will be universally regretted. We understand J. S. Locke will continue the hotel business here in place of his son. Mr. L. has had much experience that line and his daughter Cora, takes naturally to all the duties required of a landlady.

Edward Braun has bought of S. B. Stevens of Toledo, an exceedingly fine refrigerator for which alone, he paid $300 aside from freight and the expense attending the putting it in place. A week has already been spent in this last, and it is not yet completed. The refrigerator will hold five tons of ice, has two apartments, one for quarters and one for cut pieces. It is handsomely veneered, has glass windows and nickel plated latches. Mr. B. is enterprising, reliable and cleanly in everything pertaining to his business, and deserves patronage.

The teachers of the M. E. Sunday school generally will entertain their classes at their own homes each in his or her way, for the Christmas time; and on Christmas eve, will have a song service at the church. At the U. B. church teachers and scholars are rehearsing for some kind of an entertainment, largely musical. Generally, those interested in Sunday schools are learning that the labor, time and money they expend that their classes may have a happy time, and receive gifts to still more strengthen their interest, is much of it wasted on the children who flock in shortly before Christmas caring only for the present they may receive and drop out soon after. Another objection to Christmas trees is the practice that has become so so common of parents who are able, making many and handsome gifts to their children and sending them to the church to give publicly. Naturally the children of parents unable to do this, feel hurt, and not understanding it, think injustice is done them. The object of the whole thing is thus perverted and would better be abandoned. The writer has been present when the gifts received by adults at home who had no children in the school, and were in no way interested, sent their gifts to the church to receive them again publicly.

BUTLER.

Henry Haskins is making extensive repairs on his building near the postoffice He will have a model store room when finished.

Tom. Revett has retired from night patrolman on our streets, and has purchased an interest in a saloon, and unless signs prove deceptive, is on the down grade to blue ruin.

A new jewelery store has been started here by parties from Kagrange. We welcome them among us and hope for their success. Clinton Ely, an old time fixture of Butler, remains among us. Rumor has it that he will go into business here again.

For the first time in thirty years, to to the best of the writer's recollection no church bells sang happy music last Sabbath. The day seemed the dreariest one Butler has ever witnessed. The sad change had been wrought by a scare from diphtheria. A week ago, Miss Sabie Bordner, daughter of Jonathan Bordner, became suddenly afflicted with this dread disease, and despite the best medical skill succumbed to the malady, and died last Saturday morning and was buried the same day. She was one of Butler's most popular young ladies, and we understand was engaged to be married within a week or two of date of her sad and unexpected death. Her sudden death and the nature of her disease has almost created a panic. The schools of the city, church, and theaters are closed. The health board have come in for liberal share of criticism, for not giving the matter more attention, as fears are felt that the dread scourge may spread. It may prevent any Christmas festivities.

Died, Sunday, Dec 18, 1892, at his home three miles east and one mile north of Butler, Ind. Dr. James Milligan in the 77th year of his age. Dr. Milligan was born in Washington county, Pa., May 31st, 1816, where he grew to manhood receiving a liberal education in the schools of his day and as the circumstances of his fathers' farm permitted, he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. James Scroggs, and attended the Cleveland Medical college in 1843 and 1844. In 1845 he removed to Tuscarawas county, Ohio and practiced medicine there until 1853 when he removed to Butler, Ind., continuing his practice until age and infirmity forced him to turn his practice away. Oct. 17, 1848 he was united in marriage to Margaret Browning, of Jefferson county, Ohio. To this union were born five children all preceding him in death He resided in Butler until 1865 when he removed to his farm where he resided until his death. Dr. Milligan was a man of unusual kindness of disposition, a man of unflinching integrity, an easy debtor, yet among the very few physicians in this country who have enjoyed prosperity to the end of their days. He kept inviolate every obligation and left an untarnished name behind them. We believe he was not a member of any church yet the cries of the deserving poor were not left unheard. He leaves his aged wife to battle out life's near end but no other relative. We believe he had never traveled on a rail train. He will long be remembered by all who knew him as a kind friend and a careful and skillful physician.

AN INCOME TAX.

Let us turn back to the period when the prosperous times of 1846 to 1860 were interrupted by the war of the rebellion That exigency created a demand for more money than could be realized from the then existing low rate of taxation. It was necessary to build war ships and provide for an army to preserve the Union and protect the honor of our flag. No sacrifice was deemed too great to attain that result, and millions of money were raised and willingly contributed without protest for that purpose. We increased taxation as our necessities required it until everything taxable was on the list. We taxed the wealth of the rich and the necessities of the poor, and yet we were unable to raise sufficient revenue to meet the enormous expenses of that terrible conflict, and we were compelled to create a debt of $3,000,000,000.

This was a debt of honor, due from all the people, contracted for the protection of our lives, our property, and our honor, and as the property, of the rich man was protected and preserved for them as well as the homes of the poor, they should not complain if they are called upon to pay their share of that debt. The war taxes were said to be necessarily temporary in their operation; they could not be maintained in times of peace, and solemn promises were made by the party which imposed them that as soon as the government recovered from its financial embarassment and established its credit among the nations of the world the war taxes should be removed. They have partially fulfilled that promise; but how was it done?

As I have said before, all were equally taxed under those laws according to their ability to pay, and all should have been fairly dealt with when the burden was to be removed. Was it so done? But few, if any, of the burdens resting upon the shoulders of the vast army of consumers, most of whom are poor, were removed, but, in fact, have been increased from time to time, and as their numbers have been increased their consuming power has grown until they pay almost all the expenses of the government.

The old soldier crippled in the army, now attempting to live on a pension of $12 a month, pays almost as much tax as Carnegie with his boasted income of $1,500,000 a year.

How have the millionaires fared? Immediately after the war they commenced scheming to remove their burdens, and in 1870 they accomplished it by the removing of all taxes imposed upon wealth and business, and they were thereby relieved from the payment of $247,703,000 per annum. Having thus shifted the burden of taxation entirely from their shoulders, they ought to have been, but were not satisfied. Their wealth consisted largely in bonds and other moneyed obligations which were only worth from 50 to 60 cents upon the dollar in gold.

Having succeeded in duping the people so easily, in relieving themselves from taxation, they commenced to show their fine Italian hand in another direction. By adroit legislation they commenced to contract the currency, and continued it until their 50-cent dollar was worth 100 cents in gold. By this "slight turn of the wrist" they doubled their wealth and imposed the burden of paying the public debt upon the poor. It is hard to think how the avarice of man could demand more, yet they were not content with their gold dollar as it was, but by fraud, in 1873, demonetized silver, which has again resulted in increasing the purchasing power of their 50-cent dollar. "What fools we mortals be." Having the power to prevent it, yet through ignorance or lack of courage permitting this egregious wrong.

Had the government collected from the rich that $247,703,482 per annum for the last twenty-two years it would amount to the almost incomprehensible sum of $5,449,476,604. Add to that 4 per cent interest for the average time, eleven years, and it would swell the sum to $7,847,246,309, which by the repealing acts of 1870 has been left in the possession of the rich, a sum equal to one-ninth of the wealth of the United States. With that money they have been enabled to corner the markets and increase or decrease values at their pleasure, and compel all to yield to them or be ground under their feet.

During that time customs duties and internal-revenue taxes have been collected at war rates, and the people have paid in round numbers $7,000,000,000. If we add to that sum interest at 4 per cent for the average time, eleven years, it will increase the sum which measures the burden imposed upon the people to $10,080,000,000, not a cent of which was taken from wealth, widening the financial breach between the rich and the poor to the amount of almost $18,000,000,000. Yet this is a small sum as compared with the amount which cannot be estimated, which has been collected from the people by manufacturers and speculators under the name of protection. Under such legislation is it strange that 25,000 men should own over half of the wealth or property of the United States?

Stricken Down with Heart Disease.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I feel it my duty, as well as a pleasure, to publish, unsolicited, to the world the benefit received from DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE REMEDIES. I was stricken down with Heart Disease and its complications, a rapid pulse varying from 90 to 140 beats per minute, a choking or burning sensation in the wind pipe, oppression in the chest, THOUSANDS much pain in the region of the heart and below lower rib, pain in the arms, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, weakness and general debility. The arteries in my neck would throb violently, the throbbing of my heart could be heard across a large room and would shake my whole body. I was so nervous that I could not hold my hand steady. I have been under the treatment of eminent physicians, and have taken gallons of Patent Medicine without the least benefit. A friend recommended your remedies. She was cured by Dr. Miles' remedies. I have taken three bottles of your New Heart Cure and two bottles Nervine. CURED My pulse is normal, I have no more violent throbbing of the heart, I AM A WELL MAN. I sincerely recommend every one with symptoms of Heart Disease to take Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies and be cured.

It was known that lumber, salt and all freight would be cheapened and it was reasoned that increased value of real-estate, growth of business, encouragement to manufacture and ready communication with other towns were sufficient grounds for soliciting and inducing liberal subscriptions, ever the surest means of getting a railroad. There will always be found people ready to form companies and build railroads to any point, provid-

In proportion that wealth has been acquired by the few the farmers of the country have grown poor. In 1850 the farmers owned 70 per cent of all the wealth of the United States, and although their lands are the richest in the world, and they have been economical and labored hard during all these years since, they now own less than 20 per cent. JOHN G. CARLISLE'S, that period than they were before.

Great Speech on the Tariff.

Protection Did Not Help Wages.

But, Mr. President, I must pass on to another subject. The committee also, as I have already said, caused an investigation to be made as to the rates of wages during this same period in fifteen of what are called general occupations, most of which are almost entirely in the nonprotected industries, as will be seen when I come to state them, and in fifteen special occupations which are highly protected by the tariff law.

The result of that investigation is shown by the report. The fifteen general occupations selected by the committee as fairly representative of the rate of wages received in all the general occupations in the country were as follows, and I asks senators to give their attention to them as I state them, in order that they may determine for themselves how far they are protected: Bakers, blacksmiths, bricklayers—I suppose there is scarcely anybody who will insist that bricks can be laid in a wall in a foreign country and imported to this country, and therefore a bricklayer is not much protected by a tariff law; cabinet makers, carpenters—of whom the same thing may be said as of bricklayers; common laborers, farm laborers, machinists, masons—who lay stone in a wall which cannot be imported—molders of iron, painters, plumbers, stonecutters, tailors and tinsmiths. These are the fifteen general occupations selected by the committee, and they are the occupations upon which the rates of wages rose 75-100ths of 1 per cent. during the period covered by the investigation, and they were that much higher at its close than they were at the beginning.

The senator from Rhode Island stated generally, as will be seen from his printed speech, that the committee had found that while there had been a decline in prices there had been an increase of 75-100ths of 1 per cent. in wages, whereas I assert now, with the tables before me, that the only instances in which any increase of wages occurred, taking the whole together, were in those fifteen substantially unprotected industries, and I will show presently that in the fifteen highly protected industries in which the rates of wages had increased before the McKinley bill passed there was a decrease after it passed. If any of these fifteen general occupations are or can be protected or in any way assisted by the tariff, it must be cabinet makers and molders of iron, and yet, although the McKinley tariff act increased the duties on household or cabinet furniture, the wages of cabinet makers fell after its passage, and although it reduced the duties upon all forms of iron castings except hollow ware, coated, glazed or tinned, the wages in that occupation increased after its passage.

I do not make this statement for the purpose of showing that the act itself increased wages in the one case or decreased them in the other. My purpose is simply to show that the tariff does not affect wages at all except to diminish their purchasing power, because if it did we could prove two wholly inconsistent propositions to be true—first, that tariffs raise wages, and secondly that tariffs reduce wages. The man who wants to employ labor does just what is done by every other man who wants to procure anything—he gets it at the very lowest rate at which the law of supply and demand will enable him to get it, tariff or no tariff. The employer pursues the same course, whether he is in a free trade country or in a protective country.

The general statement made by the senator from Rhode Island that the wages of labor rose 75-100ths of 1 per cent. during the period of investigation was true only of the fifteen unprotected occupations and should have been qualified accordingly.

I have already said that we ascertained the rates of wages in fifteen other industries, and I will now enumerate them in order that senators may determine for themselves whether they are industries which the tariff is intended to protect. They are the manufactures of bar iron, boots and shoes, cotton goods, cotton and woolen goods, crucible steel, flint glass, green glass, lumber, machinery, pig iron, steel ingots, steel blowers, steel rails, window glass and woolen goods. Here are fifteen of the most highly protected industries in the United States, and the wages of the laborers employed in them fell 89-100ths of 1 per cent. after the passage of the McKinley act, nothwithstanding the rise of 75-100ths of 1 per cent. in the wages of laborers engaged in the nonprotected industries.

One of the most significant facts disclosed by the report in relation to this subject is that the rates of wages in these protected industries had increased 65-100ths of 1 per cent. between the beginning of the investigation and the approval of the tariff act on Oct. 1, 1890, and consequently the entire decrease of 89-100ths of 1 per cent. occurred after this law was passed for the benefit of the workingman.

Now, Mr. President, on these questions concerning wholesale and retail prices, cost of living and rates of wages, I have presented the figures made by the statistician of the committee, based upon the actual returns made to us by the agents who were sent out, not to take anybody's statement or anybody's testimony or hear anybody's argument, but to go to the books showing the actual transactions in the retail stores in these seventy cities; to go to the pay rolls in the manufacturing establishments, and take from them the exact amount of wages paid on the first of each month covered by this investigation, and I confidently submit the results to the senate and the country as a complete vindication of the judgment pronounced by the people upon the policy of high protection at the election in 1890. There was no attempt at misrepresentation or deception except upon the part of those who had become alarmed at the consequences of their own favorite measure of legislation. The people were not deceived then and they will not be deceived now by any false deductions made from this report, or by any frantic appeals to save the country from the imaginary horrors of free trade.

Gen. Washington's Artificial Teeth.

John Greenwood, who established himself in New York five years after the close of the Revolution, was the first American who distinctly practiced the profession of dental surgery. He carved out of ivory a set of teeth for General Washington, in 1890, and another set in 1695. In a letter which has been preserved the "Father of his Country" complains, in a dignified way, that his teeth hurt him and do not very satisfactorily serve the purpose for which they were designed. His portraits of the period when he was constrained to wear artificial teeth, show the bulging lip and the protruding jaw-line, and give his face an unnatural appearance. His plates were secured by spiral springs; and though clumsy, ugly, irritating things, ridiculous as compared even with such a denture as a poor washerwoman could now procure for five dollars, they were then regarded as a triumph of the dental art —From "Modern Dentistry," in Demorest's Family Magazine for December.

The Duluth and Superior Special.

In full keeping with its well known progressive policy the North Western Line (Chicago & Northwestern Railway), has recently inaugurated through train service between Chicago and the Lake Superior region. This new train is known as the "Duluth and Superior Special," and it leaves Chicago daily at 5:50 p. m., arriving at Superior at 8:20 a. m. and Duluth at 8:52 a. m, the next day, making the journey in the remarkably quick time of fifteen hours. The train is made up of baggage cars, standard day coaches and palace buffet sleeping cars of the most modern and approved design, and all classes of passengers are carried through without change of cars. Supper is served in dining car after departure from Chicago, and breakfast is served from a well stocked buffet before arrival at Duluth. To insure yourself a quick and comfortable journey be sure and ask for tickets via the North Western Line. Any ticket agent can furnish full information regarding this railway, or it will be promptly furnished upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and ticket agent. Chicago. 8

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1867—Continued.

It was known that lumber, salt and all freight would be cheapened and it was reasoned that increased value of real-estate, growth of business, encouragement to manufacture and ready communication with other towns were sufficient grounds for soliciting and inducing liberal subscriptions, ever the surest means of getting a railroad. There will always be found people ready to form companies and build railroads to any point, provided the people will donate the money to do it with. If building was to be done, cheap lumber would be one inducement, and salt in 1837 was so high and scarce at times that the farmers south of Auburn were as badly off for this necessity as their fathers had been in their pioneer days.

The credit system with its pernicious bearing upon both the truster and the trusted was still in vogue and the grocer and the dealer in dry goods carried the farmer till by sale of wool clip, wheat crop or stock, hogs and cattle, he realized sufficiently to settle up.

There was urgent need of a market for the produce that with slight encouragement would have been brought to Auburn, but the town was helpless in this respect and it was as unpleasant as it was unprofitable to see farmers driving north along Main street seeking buyers of their loads of grain at Corunna and Waterloo where to a considerable extent, once there, they did their trading. To encourage and increase this trade, the Waterloo merchants left for themselves, at times, little if any margin and this continued till 1869 when the too well known firm of M & A. Hale becoming involved, offered such prices that their store became the farmers' Mecca.

Having granted much and many accommodations, the firm in turn asked credit which was extensively given, till doubts of their stability were awakened, suspicion ripened into certainty, and a "Hale storm" developed that well nigh ruined numbers and left the community nearly $75,000 poorer. They compromised at a paltry per cent and the assets were principally consumed in settlement.

The Hales were enterprising business men and did much to attract trade to Waterloo, but their heavy failure more than equaled their services to the town and struck a blow from which it was difficult to recover in loss of prestige in community.

Confidence is the soul of credit and it has been a great help to Auburn. Various parties attributing previous failures to causes by which they were certain they would not suffer, came to town, opened one or another kind of goods, ran their brief, disastrous career and silently departed to give place to others no less unfortunate. It was not that they were not good business men and mention of their names in connection with their efforts to secure patronage would reflect credit for their ill fated perseverance.

Illy bestowed trust resulting in total loss and light demand on part of the townspeople rendering supply easy, forbade extended opening, and the remedy has been found in increase of population, establishment of manufactures, a good market and fair dealing.

The woolen mill of whose history we have spoken, continued manufacture and its cloths of fine material, well spun and woven, found ready sale from shelves of town stores and demand elsewhere.

The saw mill east of the court house was kept busy cutting lumber from logs brought there in large numbers and the grist mills were invaluable during this critical period and the wreck by boiler explosion of the Union mills was felt to be a misfortune threatening what of promise the town had.

The grand army of the republic has posts at Auburn, Waterloo, Butler, Garrett and St. Joe enrolling a large number of ex-soldiers and constituting an organization highly meritorious in their deeds of charity to the needy and sympathy to those in trouble. In the spring of 1867, an abortive attempt was made at Auburn to found there a post. Better success was met at Waterloo when early in March the first post in DeKalb county was established. This same lively town, also about the same time took the first step looking to the supply of banking facilities as a broker's and banking office was there opened by J. D. Harford.

In Feb. '67, John L. Davis of Auburn, received the appointment of agent of the M. U. Express office in his hardware store, and for many years furnished extended facilities for the transaction of business of this character. The public were under great obligations to him for this improvement and gave him their patronage till recently when increasing trade and other business led to the transfer of express matters to others.

There were frequent changes in the managers of the mails. Major Sprott was commissioned to succeed Case, only to be superseded by John D. Burr and he in turn by William Rush for there were the days of reconstruction when Andrew Johnson was "swinging around the circle."

At the court house, George R. Hoffman as recorder was during, a part of his time this year, employed by the returned soldiers in recording their discharges thus sensibly making provision against possible loss in the future when those papers have proved so valuable to their aging and infirm owners.

Lewis J. Blair had been nominated for the office of treasurer by the republican party of the county and his election had followed. He employed to assist him John D. Burr, previously mentioned. Auburn had no bank, and the taxes collected in the spring in one installment, were for the most part deposited in a safe which bore but little resemblance to the solid and secure successor at present in use.

And now DeKalb county, her townships, and her towns experienced a loss whose effects on schools, on corporations, on individuals and on political supremacy were gravely felt.

(To be continued next week.)

Questions and Answer.

We have received the following questions from a friend, and will answer as nearly as we can with the means at hand:

Does any country manufacture farm machinery equal in quality to that manufactured in this country?

No country makes agricultural implements equal to ours, though several countries make such as are satisfactory to them. A good amount of machinery for various manufacting establishments is brought into this country, but we think no agricultural implements, or at least not much.

Are there any imported and if so what per cent., duty is charged on same?

We have no reports from which we can state how much is imported. There is a duty on all articles manufactured from wood or iron the rate being 35 to 45 per cent., on the value of the goods. So that we see, if any of the articles named, plows, mowers, binders, etc., are imported they pay a high duty. Machinery imported for other uses, pays same rate.

A Count of the Electors.

According to the latest returns Cleveland has 278 electors, or all from Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin, and also six from Michigan, one from Ohio eight from California and one from North Dakota.

Harrison has 144 electors, including all from Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hamphire, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, Washington and Wyoming, with eight electors from Michigan, twenty three from Ohio, three from Oregon, one from North Dakota and one from California.

Weaver's electors number twenty-two. He has the complete votes of Colorado, Idaho, Kansas and Nevada, with one vote from Oregon and one from North Dakota.

It is unprecedented, says the Chicago News-Record, that the electoral vote of five states should be divided. The arrangement for choosing electors by congressional districts is responsible for the division in Michigan. Fusion on one elector by democrats and populists caused the result in Oregon, and the peculiarity of the North Dakota fusion led to even the division of the three electors there. The division in Ohio and California was apparently due to a misconception on the part of a few hundred voters, of the proper method of marking the Australian ballot.

Cleveland's majority over both competitors is 112.

AN INCOME TAX.

Speech of Hon. C. A. O. McClellan in the House of Representatives, March 30, 1892.

In proportion that wealth has been acquired by the few the farmers of the country have grown poor. In 1850 the farmers owned 70 per cent of all the wealth of the United States, and although their lands are the richest in the world, and they have been economical and labored hard during all these years since, they now own less than 20 per cent. The conditions of the farmer and the present plutocrat have been reversed, and if something is not done to change the course of events it will be but a short time until all the wealth will be in the hands of a few, as it was in the Roman Empire at the time of its fall.

These appalling facts must convince us that there is something radically wrong somewhere, and should arouse the people to hunt out and destroy the wrong.

During the last session of Congress, as a step in the right direction, I introduced a bill providing for an income tax. I did not think it would be passed by that Congress. I did not expect that it would ever be reported from the committee, as those who were in power then were owned, body and soul, by the money power of the land and dared not act contrary to their wishes. I did, however, hope that the question would be brought to the attention of the country, and in that I have not been entirely mistaken. You hear more said now in the press about an income tax than ever before, and the people who command and should control legislation are agitating the question, and they will, sooner or later, as sure as time lasts, compel the enactment of such a law. The discussions going on all over the country will bring out the truth, and when the condition we are in is realized the people can no longer be deceived. "All the people can not be deceived all the time."

I hope and believe that the committee on ways and means will report to the house a bill upon that subject this session, and I believe the democratic members will pass it. The democrtic party stands pledged to the people for equal, fair, and honest legislation, and I feel satisfied that the members on this floor will carry out that pledge. If they neglect or refuse to do so, others will be selected in their place who will. This great wrong can not be continued after the people understand it, and I have confidence in their intelligence and ability when they apply themselves to a discussion of the subject.

All other nations, in some form or other, tax the wealth of the country for national expenses, and in all of the states of the Union taxes are imposed upon property. England imposes an income tax from which she collects $77,000,000 per annum, and it is not a new experiment in the United States.

In 1862 an income tax was provided for which in 1866 yielded $72,982,160, and during the few years it was in force we collected $346,908,738, but in 1870, while the farmer was at his plow and the mechanic at his forge, the representatives of the millionaires by a bare majority of one vote in the House and only one in the Senate repealed that law. We then had 33,009,000 inhabitants, we now have twice that number and three times as much wealth, and if the law had been continued it would now produce $200,000,000 per annum.

Suppose, however, we had collected only seventy-three millions per annum, as we did in 1866, what a vast sum it would have produced, and what good results might have followed without increasing the burden upon the consuming class. The law has been repealed twenty two years, and the sum it would have produced would now amount to $1,605,607,520; add to that interest for the average time, eleven years at 4 per cent., and we would have the enormous sum of $2,312,074,828 enough to make two thousand three hundred and twelve millionaires. Is it hard to see how the millionaires are made under such a legislation?

Resolutions of Respect.

Hall of Union Lodge, No. 136, K. of H., Waterloo, Ind.

Whereas: It has pleased the Supreme Ruler of the universe to remove from our midst, in the prime of his manhood, our beloved brother, Geo. H. Duncan:

Whereas; While bowing in humble submission, knowing he doeth all things well, we deeply deplore the death of brother Duncan, therefore be it,

Resolved: That in his death this lodge has lost a tried and worthy brother, and we extend to the bereaved wife and children, in this hour of their sad bereavement, our heartfelt sympathy.

Resolved; That these resolutions be inscribed upon a page of our records and an engrossed copy be sent to the family of our deceased brother, as an evidence of our appreciation of his many virtues, and that the same be given to the press for publication.

TROPHIES OF A CHASE

AFTER THE FLEETING ITEMS OF NEWS.

Many Villages in Finland are Snow-Bound and the People are Starving—The Canadian War Scare—Work of Train Wreckers—Frozen in an Ice-House.

FINLAND'S FAMINE.

Many Villages Are Snow-bound and the People Are Starving.

The famine in North Finland is increasing and there is a movement in Sweden to renew subscriptions of last year for the aid of the starving Finlanders. Although the famine is raging in Russian territory yet the Finns, on account of their old attachment to Sweden, look rather to the Swedes than to the Russians for assistance. The emigration of Finns is receiving a great impulse on account of the famine which is prevalent chiefly among the agricultural classes, who were unable, owing to the scarcity of corn last year, to provide anything for the winter.

Many villages are snowbound, and it is feared that the sufferings of the people are intense, as they have no means of breaking through the great drifts on account of the weakness of themselves and of their cattle. It is feared that whole communities have perished, as nothing has been heard from them for a number of days. Owing to the hardiness of the Finns, it is hoped, however, that the famine has not been so destructive of life as many apprehend. It is believed that the survivors will abandon the country by wholesale during the coming spring and summer, and remove to some part of North America where they will have a better chance to maintain themselves.

CANADIAN WAR SCARE.

The Three Cruisers Are Very Small Affairs

Buffalo special: The three Canadian cruisers, built at Owen Sound, Ont., which are causing so much warlike talk, are said by an old ship owner, one of the few who have been allowed to inspect these vessels, to be much smaller than has been represented. He asserts that they are armed with one small gun each, and are, in fact, what Sir Julian Pauncefote said they were, mere revenue cutters. "Besides," said the Captain, "even if they were 350-ton vessels, as has been reported, what does that signify, when it is known that within a month past there have been launched at Toledo two 2,550-ton vessels, intended for lake trade, but purposely constructed so that in a very few hours' time they can be converted into formidable men-of-war, capable of knocking these Canadian cruisers into a cocked hat." One of the new Canadian cutters is now in the Georgian Bay, and the other two are in Nova Scotian waters.

Arrest of a Bigamist.

Kokomo (Ind.) special: Silas W. B. Jones, 78 years of age, who came here from Portland, Ore., over a year ago, and who several months later married the daughter of ex-County Auditor Stiles, was arrested here the other night on a charge of bigamy by an officer named Murray from Denver, Col. Jones pronounces the arrest a case of blackmail. The prisoner is a brother of the Rev. J. O. Jones, a prominent minister of Kokomo, while one of his sons is judge of the probate court at Portland, Ore., and another a member of the Oregon legislature.

Disaster Off the Coast of Spain.

Madrid special: Violent gales are raging off the west coast of Spain. Reports indicate that there have been many fatalities in this part of the Atlantic, and that shipping has suffered seriously along the Spanish coast. The ship Maria Joquina managed to make haven at Vigo in a disabled condition, her rudder having been unshipped and her mast broken. During the gales her captain was killed and two seamen were drowned. The ship Maria Teresa foundered of San Lucar, and eight of the crew were drowned

Frozen in an Ice-House.

An unknown man was found dead in Kramer & Benedict's ice-house north of Elwood, Ind. He has not been identified. He is a medium-sized man, light hair and mustache, and apparently has been dead several hours. He is supposed to have wandered in there, where he fell asleep and froze to death. Marshall Hunter notified Coroner Armington of Anderson, who held an inquest. Nothing new was developed except a scrap of paper bearing the address, "Ed Miller, Allegheny City, Pa."

Work of Train Wreckers.

Advices have been received of an attempt to wreck a passenger train on the Central railroad of Georgia below Waynesboro, Ga. It resulted in the engine and tender toppling over, the firemen, Henry Hoops being caught between the two and held for three hours before he could be extricated. His injuries are not fatal. The wreckers have not yet been captured.

The End of Mark Edwards.

Sag Harbor (N. Y.) special: Mark Edwards, 55 years of age, a noted character of this vicinity, who has passed half his life in the county jail as an habitual drunkard, was burned to death in his own house, about a mile outside of this village. He lived alone.

Jack Hall Knocked Out.

Charles Johnson of St. Paul, and Jack Hall, of Australia, welter weights, fought at the Palo Alto Club, San Francisco. Johnson had the best of it throughout the fight and in the eighth round knocked Hall out.

Brave Deed.

Oswego (N. Y.) special: For several days the two keepers of the beacon lighthouse here have been imprisoned by the ice. They ran up a flag of distress, and a relief party was organized, headed by Capt. Gowan of the steamer Reliance, and the captain of the schooner Annandale. The party started in a small boat, and, after a terrible battle of three hours with the ice and waves, succeeded in rescuing the keepers. They had been without food for two days.

Gen. Dent Dead.

General Frederick T. Dent, the distinguished soldier and brother-in-law of Ulysis S. Grant, died in Denver, Col., of dropsy. He was 72 years old. As is fitting the interment will be at the Fort Leavenworth Military Cemetery. General Dent has been in Denver for four years. He was born in Missouri in 1820, and received an appointment to West Point from that State. Graduating with the class of 1843, he was appointed Second Lieutenant of the Sixth Infantry, July 1, 1843. He was given the rank in the Fifth Infantry March 3, 1846. During the first years of his service he was on the frontier fighting Indians. He served with bravery in the Mexican war and was brevetted first lieutenant August 20, 1848, for gallant and meritorious service in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco. In September, 1847, he was brevetted captain. He was severely wounded in the battle of Moline Del Rey. He served through the Civil War on the staff of Gen. Grant with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In March, 1865, he was brevetted brigadier-general. He was military secretary under Gen. Grant from 1869 to 1873. He served with the artillery service for several years and was retired at his own request in 1883 after serving forty years in various branches of the United States army.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.

Two Ladies Pitch Headlong Down an Elevator Shaft.

A shocking accident occurred at Siemon & Bro.'s book store, Fort Wayne, Ind., in which two persons lost their lives.

Mrs. John Swaidner, jr., and Mrs. Mary Noonan, were making purchases in Siemon's store. The place was crowded with customers and the elevator was in frequent use. Both ladies had been on the second floor looking at some pictures and wishing to descend, stepped into the elevator. Another lady and a little girl also got aboard. The boy in charge, John Schophorst, pulled the elevator cord to come down. For some reason it began to ascend, and, it is thought, the boy probably pulled the wrong cord. It is but a short distance to the third floor, and when this was reached one of the ladies stepped off. At this point there is a passage way of about two feet, with a wall in front leading apast the shaft. When the elevator is at a stand still it is very easy to step off and walk to the third floor across the passage way. This the lady who stepped off did very easily, as the elevator was moving slowly, and was on a level with the floor. The lady who stepped off was apparently not greatly frightened, but as the elevator continued to ascend the other two ladies became frightened. The older, Mrs. Noonan, sprang out after the elevator had passed the opening of the third floor about four feet and landed on the narrow passage way. She landed safely and retained her balance, but a second later Mrs. Swaidner sprang after her and striking the narrow passage way, caught hold of Mrs. Noonan, and both lost their balance. Both ladies gave a wild shriek and pitched headlong down the shaft. They fell a distance of forty feet down the shaft onto the brick paved basement. Mrs. Swaidner was killed instantly and Mrs. Noonan lived but a few hours.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Grover Smith Instantly Killed and Joseph Fatally Injured.

A most distressing accident occurred at New Haven, Ind., at the home of Samuel Smith, a laborer. Mr. Smith and his family of four boys and three girls had just finished their noonday meal when the fatal mishap occurred. The oldest boy of the household is the possessor of an old-fashioned muzzle-loading shot gun. He was preparing to go out on a hunting expedition and had loaded his gun and left it standing in the kitchen.

He then went out to the barn to get his game bag. While he was gone his younger brother grabbed the gun in a playful way as he had often done before, not thinking it was loaded. Perchance a stray cap had been left on the window-sill and the lad spied it. He adjusted the cap on the gun and leveling the weapon at his two younger brothers who stood a few feet in front of him with their arms around each other, pulled the trigger. The discharge of the gun shook the very foundation of the house. The father and the older members of the household rushed to the kitchen. Upon the floor lay Grover, his 8-year-old son, motionless and lifeless with blood flowing from a hundred gun shot wounds in his breast. Joseph, his 10-year-old son was writhing in agony on the floor. Blood flowed copiously from numerous wounds in his breast, neck and arms. The son who held the smoking gun in his hands, was prostrate upon the floor, where he had been knocked by the force of the discharge of the gun.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Program for the Opening May 1.

The program for opening the Exposition next May has been completed by the committee having the matter in charge. Grover Cleveland, who will be President of the United States when the fair is opened, is to deliver the only address and start the machinery. No other orator will be heard. A poem, perhaps, by Oliver Wendel Holmes, and some music will precede Mr. Cleveland's address. After the wheels are buzzing and the crowds are rushing through the buildings it is proposed that President Cleveland and his party shall drive through the grounds and pay their respects to foreign commissioners to the fair, who will be waiting in the official headquarters to receive the Presidential party. Later in the evening Mr. Cleveland's carriage will stop in front of festival hall, and there the President will hold a public reception of two hours, from four to six.

The public will not have an opportunity to attend the exercises of formally inaugurating the great exposition. Festival hall seats but 5,000 persons, 1,000 tickets will be reserved for officials of the fair, members of Congress and others. The remaining 4,000 seats will be sold at $5 each, tickets being issued on invitation.

A LUCKY FIND.

Sensational Feature of an Insurance Case.

The Thurn insurance case of Rome, Wis., has developed an unexpected treasure of sensationalism. Thurn carried $59,000 insurance on his life, which his widow now claims and which the insurance companies refuse to pay. Thurn to all appearances, was poor, and yet his premiums were met promptly. Where he obtained the money none could answer. Mrs. Thurn has vouchsafed the following explanation: "About four years ago she was visiting a friend at Neenava in what is known as the 'Haunted house.' One evening, while out in the yard, her attention was drawn to a spot on the ground by a blue light. She had a flexible stick in hand and going to the spot indicated by the light placed the end of the stick on the ground when it began to bend and push away some of the dirt. Suddenly she noticed a box. She immediately placed it in her arms and retreated to the house without attracting attention. Going to her room, she found that it contained about $11,000 in gold and bank notes."

GETTING WARMER.

Five Soldiers Killed in a Late Battle.

Laredo (Texas) special: Information has been received here that Gen. Estrada, stationed at Mier, Mexico, is missing from his post of duty and is thought to have joined the revolutionists, who are said to be marching toward the interior of Mexico. It is known that there was a battle on the 17th on Mexican soil near Guerrero between Mexican troops and revolutionists, with a victory for the revolutionists. Five soldiers were killed. The revolutionists, 400 strong, continued their march toward the interior. When last heard from they were within a few hours march of the town of Ceralvo. The information is from a person high in authority. He further states that the Mexican troops down the river have been given orders to march into the interior and that no futher trouble will come from this side of the Rio Grande.

DOES IT MEAN WAR?

Canada's Three Armed Vessels on the Great Lakes.

Chicago special: "If Canada has built and armed three vessels for service on the lakes, as described by the officers of the Revenue Marine Service at Washington, it amounts to a declaration of war," said Major General Nelson A. Miles, alluding to the report that the Dominion has increased its armed force on the Great Lakes. The matter stirred up much interest at army headquarters, and while the General has no desire to circulate a war rumor—and, in fact, while he does not belive war will result, he does not hesitate to describe the act as a direct violation of the treaty of 1817, and to confess that he cannot see what good reason the Canadians have for so doing. When asked what he believed the motives of the Canadians to be, Gen. Miles replied:

"It is not for me to say. I have no opinion to express." Continuing he said: "I have a list of light draught war vessels in the British Navy, which shows that in a short time Canada could force a large fleet of vessels through the canal to the American inland waters—war vessels that could easily destroy every city and town on the lakes from Duluth to Detroit."

The People Won.

Mayor Thorne fined the Kokomo (Ind.) Natural Gas and Oil Company in several more cases for violation of the rate ordinance. The company, seeing that fifty or more arrests would follow, gave up the fight and paid the fines, amounting to $54. The company, which at first signified its intention of taking the case to the Supreme Court has thrown up its hands and acknowledged the validity of the ordinance. The company's attorney held that the city had no right to impose restrictions on a franchise previously granted, but the court decided otherwise and there will be no appeal.

Big Purse for a Prize Fight.

New York special: One of the largest purses ever offered for two pugilistic phenomenons since the bygone days of the celebrated fighter Figg, has been hung up for Pugilists Jack McAuliffe and Dick Burge by the Coney Island Club. The sum of American dollars which the great seaside club offers for the battle is a purse of $45,000. This latest bid completely overtops the $30,000 purse which Capt. Williams of the Crescent City Athletic Club of New Orleans, made for the stellar attraction and will undoubtedly create a big sensation in sporting circles.

Cholera Epidemic in Hamburg.

Hamburg special: It was thought that the extraordinary measures taken by the authorities would prevent another outbreak of cholera in the spring, but the indications now point to the recurrence of the disease in an epidemic form when warm weather sets in. Several cases of the Asiatic type of the disease has occurred recently and the outlook is serious. Ten new cases are officially reported and the people are beginning to grow restless, fearing that the disease will become widespread, despite the cold weather.

Not the Dalton Gang.

El Reno (Okla.) special: Five indictments have been returned by the grand jury now in session here against S. W. Sawyer, a few months ago at the head of the leading banking institution of this city, which, he declared had been robbed of $10,000 by the Dalton gang, thus causing failure. It was generally believed at the time that no robbery had been committed except by Sawyer himself, and a report of the committee appointed by the depositors and the investigation and action of the grand jury confirmed that belief.

Dynamite in a Stick of Stove Wood.

When the kitchen fire was lighted in Andrew Bickles' farm-house, near Valparaiso, Ind., there was a violent explosion. The stove was demolished, fragments hurled in every direction, a hole torn in the roof and the house virtually wrecked. Mrs. Bickles received several severe gashes in the head and her two children were so badly injured that if their lives are spared it is thought they will be blind. The explosion was caused by dynamite, which had been secreted in a stick of stove wood.

An Indian Uprising.

Mancos (Col.) special: There is a possibility of Indian trouble as a result of a rush to the San Juan gold field. "Navajo" Frank came into this place the other day. He is one of the most intelligent men in his tribe and high in the councils of the chiefs. He says the Indians are becoming apprehensive of the presence of the white men passing over the reservation. They claim the gold on the reservation for themselves and say the white men must keep off their land.

First Marriage Ceremony by a Woman.

The first known marriage ceremony performed by a woman took place at Indianapolis, recently. The contracting parties were John C. Harris of Shelbyville, and Miss Sallie Haverstick of Indianapolis. "Mrs. Rev. Minnie Thorne," as she signs herself to the return, performed the ceremony.

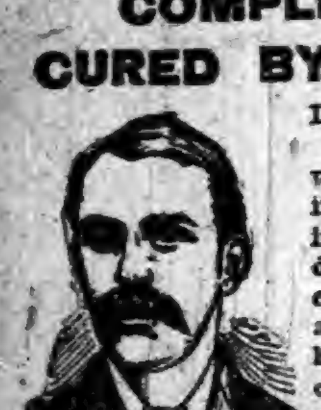
COMPLETELY
CURED BY LIVURA.



MR. J. L. WEAVER.

LIVURA M'F'G. Co.,
DEAR SIRS:—"Last winter I had La Grippe in its worst form, leaving me in a terrible condition, my Brain was confused, my Heart weak, and my legs refused to hold me up, and the muscles were so sore that it was painful to lie down. I had continual Headache, and everything I ate distressed me. I could not work, sleep, or eat, and my right side became numb. Several doctors told me I had Incipient Paralysis, and that I could get no better. I grew so weak that I could not leave the house. Hearing of PITCHER'S LIVURA I got a bottle and it helped me from the first. I took 4 bottles in all, and am PERFECTLY WELL in every way, and now work all day. I know that PITCHER'S LIVURA CURED ME."

MARYLAND

IMPROVED
ROASTER & BAKER

FOR MEATS, FOWL, FISH, ETC., AND FOR BAKING BREAD, CAKES AND PUDDINGS.
BEST
AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THE STORY OF ULLA.

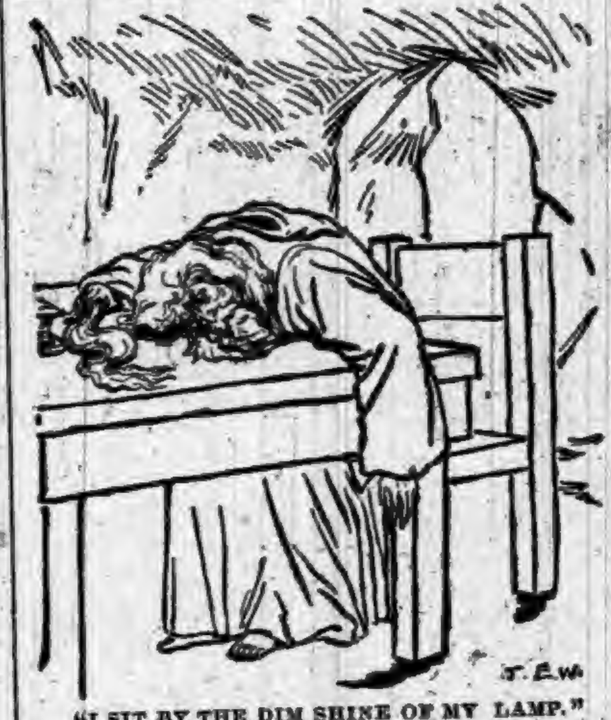
BY EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD.

CHAPTER I.

This is the story of Ulla the viking, Ulla the priest! This is the story of Ulla the proud and Ulla the humble. This is the story each sentence of which falls on the heart of the writer heavy as the hollow moan of breakers on some desolate midnight shore. And the heart of Ulla is that shore, and the pulse of the storm that is over—the storm of the life and the loving—comes distant and sad as he writes with a melancholy cadence through the hush of the evening of living.

I am that viking, I am that priest, and here in my lonely home by the edge of the northern sea I sit by the dim shine of my lamp, while the night wind sighs without, and across these lean, thin hands, these palsied, knotted fingers that tremble like the white aspen leaves, lies a fair braid of yellow hair. Long, long it seems since that braid was cut from the head that grew it. Long, long months of pain and days of regretting have passed since that strand was cut from its wearer; the salt sea has dimmed it, time has touched its luster, and the dark stain of blood is upon it, yet as I, the monk Ulla, raise that fair thing again and again to my lips and press it where naught but the sign of the new faith should be pressed—press it trembling and silently to those cold lips—something of the old love shoots through my shrunken veins—something of the strong passion that once nerved them tingles into those withered fingers that smooth that gleaming toy so tenderly, and a white mist rises to my dull eyes, and my head droops forward, and the little cell seems widening out as wide as life itself; and sad as the sound of the wind among pine trees, desolate as the beat of the tireless pulse of the sea upon the rim of the night comes to my lonely heart the echo of long ago.



"I SIT BY THE DIM SHINE OF MY LAMP."

It was in the time of my master, Halfdan tne Black, and I was a Norway jarl and lived by the white lip of the sea in Baldersund. I was young then, I was scarcely twenty, and had herds and men and farms all the way up the wild coast as far up as fair Hitteren, and a long ship lay in the creep by my homestead, and boar hounds lay on the rushes by my inglenook, and my bows and spears lay on the tressels, and a hundred jolly fellows drank from my flowing horns and carved my meats each day, and were proud to call me lord and leader. Three times as many stocked my yellow harvests and filled my barns. And I was strong and tall and big of limb, and although I was so young I had already been twice abroad and had harried across the wide sea in distant Fareyjar and down south to Ljodhus. I had sipped the glorious wine of battle, and watched the red flame of burning thorp and tower leap up to heaven from my footsteps. Princes had courted me and scalds had sung; everything I had, everything that a bold heart could hope for or a strong hand reach—everything but one; the chair on my left hand still stood empty at the feast, no bright eyes welcomed Ulla returning victorious from a foray, no tall Norway maid tempered with her presence the rude reverly in his father's hall, for Ulla was unwed.

Yet it was not for lack of fitting choice, for our maids were straight as young spruces, supple as the yellow sedges by the tarns and fair as the spring flowers of the fields when the May snow rolls back from them, and many such might I have had for the asking. Thoralla there was, for instance, whose locks were as yellow as the ripe hill barley; and Unn, whose sky-blue eyes shone wondrously kindly on her handsome neighbor when they met in shady forest path; and Thyri the slim, whose mother thought the lands of Ulla and their own would well match together, and Thora the smiler and many another. But I was wild and wayward, and as difficult to net as the free blue hawks that sail along the cliff face in springtime.

Matters were like this when my master, King Halfdan, more easily persuaded, had determined to marry the comely Ragnhild, daughter of Harold Goldbeard, and, everything having beeu settled by the ambassadors, one day in early summer from all the isles and fjords and every river town and mountain flat came trooping the Norway lords and chiefs to honor the ceremonial and see the show. By Frigga's self that was a day, when all those cavaliers came riding down to the plain by the southern city, and so far as the eye could see the meadows were aglisten with spear and cuirass and winged helms, and every way was blocked with mighty men in skins and golden armor, strong sons of Odin with wild blue eyes, keen features, and yellow hair astream upon their shoulders and mighty muscles showing beneath their clinking armlets and bands of beaten metal. Indeed, that was a day, and I could fill here, as I sit with nothing but the blank rock wall before me, a hundred pages with the names and deeds of those who came, and every name should sound to you like that of a giant and princely brother, and every splendid deed I linked to every name should bring the blush of pride to your cheek and the pulse of pleasure to your kindred hearts—but the lamp burns low and I am no scald, therefore let those warlike shadows pass unchronicled again into the voids of memory from whence they came.

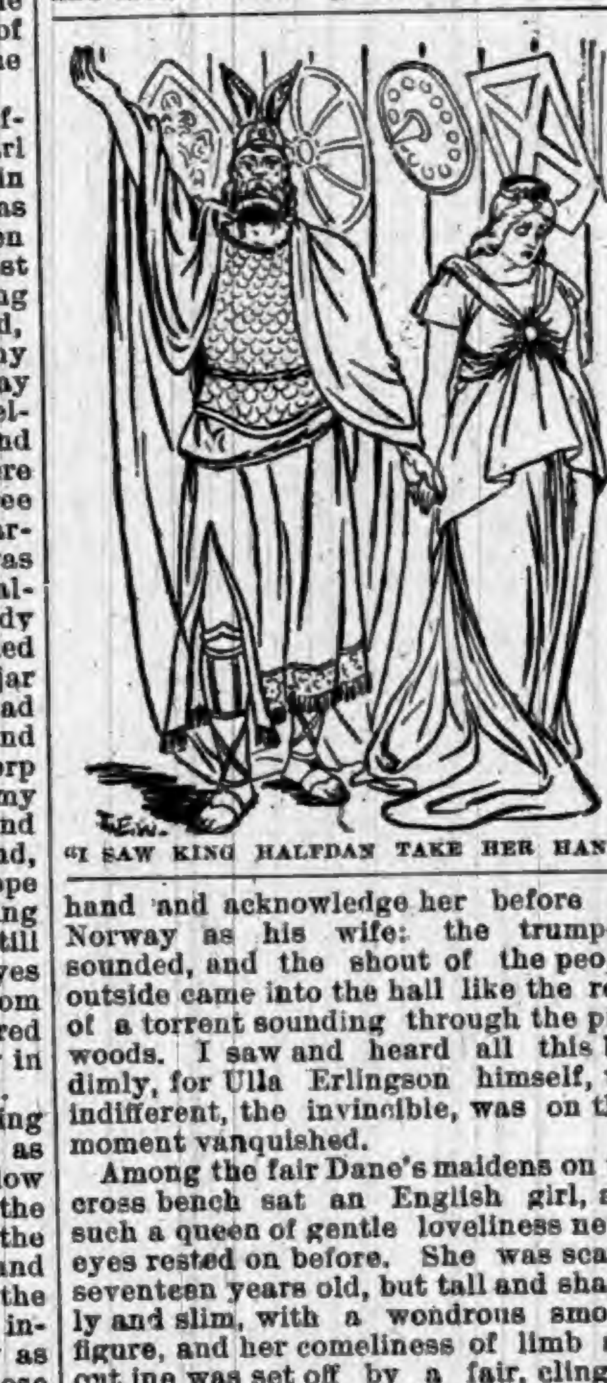
In the mid of the plain the king's men had built a hall of rough-hewn pine logs, so long and wide that 5,000 chiefs could sit to meat within it at once. And every vassal of the king had sent a polished buckler to deck the bride house, and these were ranged in rows along the roofs and sides until all these warlike trappings gleamed together with one broad shine that men could see from Akinfell to the white pools by Flekkerfjord. And every Norway maid had bound a fillet of green spruce and golden flower, and these were ranged between the shields until a cloud of soft color wrapped the palace far and near, and the sweet new pine smell hung warm and heavy overhead.

Nor was this all. Every jarl and sea lord, every captain and rover who owned a long ship or snekja, a skeid or skuta, had brought them round to the fjord and hauled them up over rollers, and there they stood, those great navies of the vikings that had paled the cheeks of maids and matrons in twenty lands, their golden names—"Deer of the Surf," "Raven of the Wind," "Ægir's Steed," "Hawk on the Gull's Track," "Snake of the Sea," carved in runic on each steep rising prow, in two long rows a mile or two in length, with parti-colored sails all set, and red raiding flag streaming on the wind, and gilt dragon heads all turned inward, and jolly crews in bright vestments in their idle ranks of oars, rnd garlands of flowers about those sides which the white ribbons of the sea foam were wont alone to deck.

All about the great mid hall were scores of lesser houses, so that where green grass grew a week ago was now a gay wooden city, and a thousand troops of horse stood munching Halfdan's hay, and a thousand stalwart clansmen were quaffing Halfdan's ale, and a thousand tables bent with Halfdan's provender, and a thousand trumpets sounded Halfdan's war-note, and a thousand scalds were singing Halfdan's praises that day King Halfdan married.

The great prince had chosen me to be among his right-hand men, and thus happened that which was the sweet and the bitter, the light and the darkness of my life. King Goldbeard came ashore from his ships early in the morning, and my handsome black-haired master took the sweet Ragnhild by the hand, and at the head of a long procession of princes, chiefs and ladies, all on foot, marched through the mighty concourse of the shouting people and up the long lane of dragon ships into the great hall itself. There the feudatories ranged themselves in gallant rows at the many tressel tables, while the kings and we with them went on to the further end, where stood some oaken benches. These made three sides of a square. On one sat Harold with his peers; on the other, facing him, was Halfdan—and I on his right—and four strong jarls from the corners of his kingdom to flank us. The last bench across the other two was filled by ladies, and amid them—all in white bride linen, with a splendid torque of jewels binding the loose folds across her bosom and a diadem of rough gold in her golden hair—sat the bride.

I scarcely know what followed. I saw the bride-price paid and the bench gifts made on bended knee. I saw the fair and frightened Ragnhild clinging weeping for a minute to her father's neck, and then I saw King Halfdan take her hand and acknowledge her before all Norway as his wife: the trumpets sounded, and the shout of the people outside came into the hall like the roar of a torrent sounding through the pine woods. I saw and heard all this but dimly, for Ulla Erlingson himself, the indifferent, the invincible, was on that moment vanquished.



"I SAW KING HALFDAN TAKE HER HAND"

Among the fair Dane's maidens on the cross bench sat an English girl, and such a queen of gentle loveliness never eyes rested on before. She was scarce seventeen years old, but tall and shapely and slim, with a wondrous smooth figure, and her comeliness of limb and cut ine was set off by a fair, clinging robe of the mystic druid green, of just such hue as you see hanging, pale and tender, over the strong black fields of the northern sea when the wet west wind blows at sunset. Her eyes were blue as fairy flax in summer, and shy, and clear, with a veiled light running somewhere deep down within them; her feet were sandaled with doe skin and white ermine, her middle was belted with a broad zone of pearls and amber beads, none of them smaller than a linnet's egg, and her hair, the crown and consummation of her loveliness, was bound up with a single fillet of red English gold.

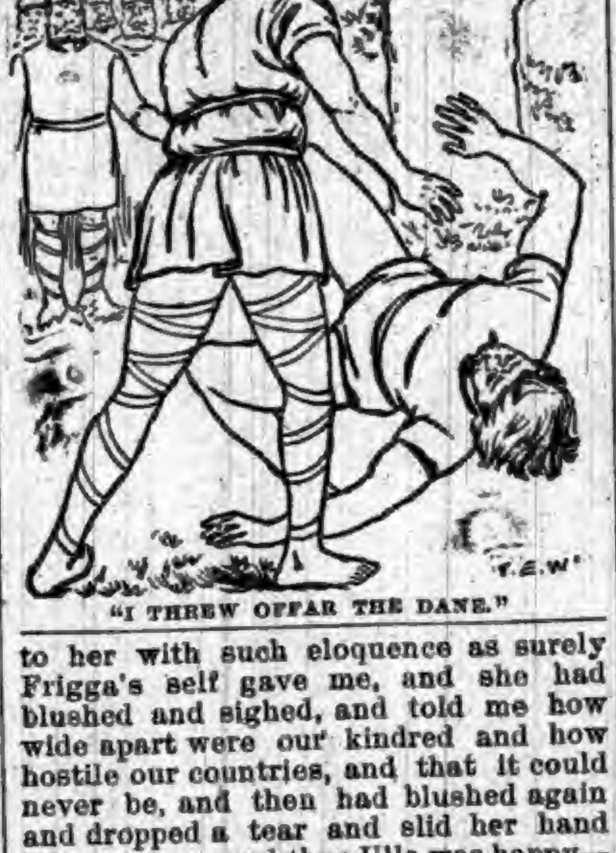
A strand of that hair now, fifty years after, lies before me in the pale flicker of my feeble lamp. The luster has gone from it, and the dull stain of blood is on it, and it is pale with the kisses of these priestly lips, and bleached by salt sea water, and I hide my eyes a space from the silent reproach of that sweet toy, for even now I cannot look upon it without a throe of heavy grief and sorrow.

But nothing I recked of this then, and before the hungry, laughing chieftains had settled down to the marriage feast—before Ragnhild and Gunna, my sweet maid—and I as flagon bearer—had once made the circle of the hundred tables and first filled with pine-bark beer each princely feaster's flagon, I loved each thing she touched, ay, and the very air she breathed.

CHAPTER II.

Three brief days we spent in happy nearness, and I found she was the daughter of an English prince—one of those lordlings whose lands we pillaged and who had sent the maiden over under the care of a surly churl, her uncle, with a woman-gift to Ragnhild in order to enlist that great lady's mediation. The first day I spent haunting the maiden's footsteps, a prey to such fits of hot hopefulness and cold despair as I thought surely no other man had suffered hitherto. The second day we had sports and contests, and plucking up heart of grace I threw Offar, the Dane, in a wrestling bout, and hurled my spear on the first try sheer through the great iron shield old Langaness of Iceland had hung for us to cast at. Ay! and under the eyes of Queen Ragnhild and all her court I spread the great sail of my long ship and urged the rowers and burst through the jostling ranks of my compeers, and sailed round the fjord and back ahead of any, and won a prize and laid it on fair Gunna's knees.

And the third day, between the rising of the sun and the setting of it, I had met the maiden among the pines by the lonely shore, and had poured my heart to her with such eloquence as surely Frigga's self gave me, and she had blushed and sighed, and told me how wide apart were our kindred and how hostile our countries, and that it could never be, and then had blushed again and dropped a tear and slid her hand into my own, and thus Ulla was happy—happy with an incredible happiness, happy beyond expectation and knowledge.



"I THREW OFFAR THE DANE."

Sweet was the breath of the pines that afternoon, pleasant the distant murmur of the sea upon the hollow rocks; soft the carpet of felted mosses, and fair the nodding flowers that fringed our path!

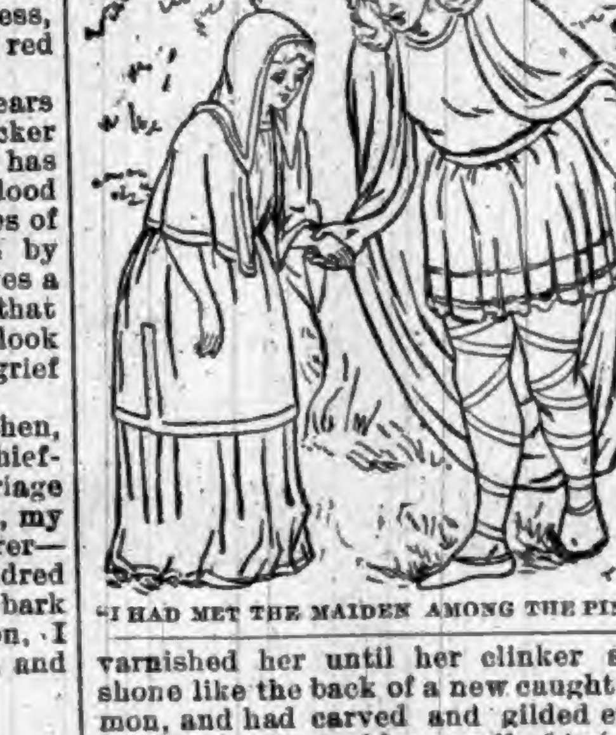
On the next morning I went to the tent where she lodged by the sullen old churl her uncle, and it was empty! The pennon was gone from in front; the red-haired sentinels were gone, the benches were empty and deserted, the doors were opened, and, sick at heart and fearful, I turned to one who stood near and asked where was the barbarian envoy and where the fair white girl who had come with him. Heavy as lead fell the answer on my ears: "The stranger had quarreled last night at the feast—had struck and been struck by a hill chieftain, and in a moment of drunken fury had ordered out his ships, had taken the white maid from her couch, and, scarcely giving her time to slip on cloak and sandals, had gone down to the strand, and, cursing everything Norwegian, launched into the black, midnight sea, and sailed away through the darkness to the land of the strangers."

Bitter was my grief and disappointment! For half a day I ran up and down the shore distracted, rage and chagrin alternately mastering my soul. Then I bethought me of my longship and had her dragged to the shore, and, swift as a white sew-mew before a squall, I fled out to sea, and crossing over the rough water, beat up and down the English coast for a week hoping to see them, and when that hope was vain back I came disconsolate to the vikings' shore and sailed for many days about the islands, asking at every town from kocky Jar to merchant Nidaros whether a ship of the foreigners with a white maid and red-haired men on board had put in there, and got laughed at for my pains, and so I came back empty-handed and empty-hearted at last to my own homestead.

Very weary were the days and months that followed. The sunshine had gone out of the world, and I shunned my jolly comrades; the light laughter of the Norway maids was bitter to me. I hated my hawks and my wolf-dogs; I no longer fed my sleek horse; my weapons rusted on their hooks; my lendirmen, unreproved, pillaged my stocks and barns, and day and night I hung, disconsolate, over the remembrance of my loss.

CHAPTER III.

Ten years had passed; I had forayed north and south and asked with every lessening hope for news of her I sought from captives and merchants, but one and all shook their heads and could tell me nothing. In many a bloody fray on the English shore and sack of thorp or castle I had borne her image in my mind hoping to find her likeness somewhere, and thus, I say, ten years had passed, and presently still another spring came round and we had eaten all our winter provisions and were weary of last year's concubines, and rusty with basking by winter's fires and yearnful for the breath of the free ocean, or the yet dearer breath of adventure, and thus one day I went down to the strand where my good ship lay hauled up and tented over against the storm and snow, to see the work that Skaun the carpenter and Vedrey of the brushes had done upon her. And as I walked about that gallant hulk my blood took a new color and beat a quicker measure than it had done for long, while the winter sloth dropped from me and the hunger of the rover for quest and danger was born anew in my heart. A better skeid never was steered by a sea king's son, I thought. Her sides were blue—blue as last winter's ice in the shadows of June—right up from the water edge to the high gunwale, while inside the Trondhjem forest oak was scoured as white as a maiden's linen. The tall mast in the center was slim and straight as an arrow, and on either side were rowlock holes for sixty oars. A lovely ship, indeed, and cunning Vedrey had varnished her until her clinker sides shone like the back of a new caught salmon, and had carved and gilded every oar hole with a golden scroll of twisting serpents, and here and there and everywhere had been at work so deftly that it was a day's wonder to explore the workings of the loving zeal wherewith he had adorned the vessel from glittering stem to stern. And Skaun had seen to every peg and sinew that laced her shapely sides; he had been aft and forward; above, below; had scraped the oars and set new seats for rowers, and caulked afresh each seam with red cowhair and resin—oh, a lovely ship, indeed, and in my pride surely I thought such a one never stood on mortal slips before. Once more I would venture a cast with fortune, and in a burst of pleasure and such life as had lain asleep too long within my heart I vowed then and there to start on a foray before three days were over. And, hot in he revulsion of my feelings, I set Skaun and Vedrey running here and there as they had never run before, and collected some of the lazy-boned villeins who had basked in my porch and snored by my pine wood fire all through the snow and frost, and made them work as they had not worked for many a day.



"I HAD MET THE MAIDEN AMONG THE PINES."

Under our busy hands the beautiful winter hulk put on her war gear and blossomed like a summer tree. We fetched out her sixty great oars, "Feet of the Sea-wolf," of ash (four men sat at each) and strapped them into their painted rowlock holes. Then we slung in the landing boats and set the great rudder aft on the starboard; we put the black leather tent on board, and under it the hudfat sleeping-bags to shield me and my jolly pillagers from the English rain. We shipped the landing planks—many were the white feet of captive girls we hoped would tread them—and a hundred stout rollers in case our longship needed to be beached. Then we put in the arms chest and filled it to the brim with glistening swords and axes, praying all the time to Odin that their shine might be dimmed ere we returned; we put the brass kettles on board, and the provisions, and barrels of water with little lids. Next we set up the tall mast that shone in its winter coat of bear's grease and was so red and straight, and hoisted to the spar the great square sail, "Cloak of the Wind." It was the great jarl Kand of Viskerdal, my foster-brother, who gave me that sheet, and it was colored blue and white and made of woolen stuff as soft as silk. Lastly of all the glistening dragon head was put upon the prow, and the warriors' shields, black and yellow, each overlapping each, were set along the bulwarks, and there, flashing in the sun with a hundred colors, beautiful and complete from stem to stern, my sea bride sat shining on the ways!

So well had we worked that the dawn of the second day from my vow we were ready, and half the valley came to see us off. All went well with the launching and in a few minutes after the props were knocked away we slid out into the fjord and floated true and straight, and at the same instant my five score fighting men set up the hymn to Odin, the sail was spread, and the long oars began to dip, swift and strong, into the merry water that ran rippling by us. Loudly, loudly I prayed from my place by the high tiller to the three fatal sisters who live beneath the ash Yggdrasil that they would send me this time to the arms of my love, and loudly, loudly to this moment I bewail me that my prayer was granted.

Columbus remained at Granada and joined valiantly in the fight. At length, on the morning of January 2, 1492, Boabdil, with his brilliant following, surrendered himself to the King Don Ferdinand. A legion of pages, with gold-embroidered garments, went before the King on foot, opening the way for his triumphal procession to the high scene of his glorious contest. The most exalted ricoshombres of Castile and Aragon, mounted on gayly trapped palfreys, and clad in robes of state, surrounded the monarch, with such display of blazonry and insignia, such splendid apparel, such varied standards, such gorgeously attired mace-bearers, that they seemed themselves to be an army of kings.

Ferdinand II. had donned his royal robes, and his crimson mantle lined with ermine almost concealed his horse, while the countless crowns of his house and line were seen in miniature, glittering with jewels, attached to his splendid, plume-bedecked cap. Boabdil, on the contrary, was clad in black, as befitting his dignity and his situation, wearing a casque of gold-incrusted steel adorned with mottoes appropriate to his rank, his body adorned with those famous Oriental amulets, whose efficacy he himself had never known, but in whose potency the wretched man trusted even in the midst of his irreparable misfortunes.

He attempted to dismount when he came to Ferdinand, and even removed his feet from the stirrups in order to alight and kneel before him who had broken and humbled him, but an imperious gesture of the Christian monarch stayed his purpose. Whereupon, deeply moved by such signs of kindness and benevolence, the Rey Chico, the "Little King," begged earnestly to kiss the royal hand, but Ferdinand replied that such homage was proper from a vassal to his lord, never between equals.

Then Boabdil, reining his horse beside the Aragonese King, eagerly bent forward and imprinted an ardent kiss upon the latter's right arm. Having fulfilled this act of courtesy, which he deemed to be imposed by defeat upon the vanquished, he quickly put his hand to his girdle, and his tawny visage flushed as they touched the thing they sought, the two great keys of the magic city, keys that opened the twin portals of that paradise whence Mohammedan genius and Mohammedan culture had shot forth their last rays of dying splendor.—Century.

Worms That Raise Tons of Sand.

Mr. Darwin a few years before his death made the nonscientific world familiar with the work of worms in passing earth through their bodies, and with the wonderful results effected by them in a comparatively short space of time. More recently C. Davison has followed up Mr. Darwin's researches in this field of science. Last year Mr. Davison examined the sands between Holy Island and the coast of Northumberland, a large flat stretch of beach familiar to most persons who travel by the east coast route to Scotland. The observer found that the number of castings of sand thrown up by the lobworms gave an avarage of 50,000,000 to the square mile. A portion of the castings was weighed and the total weight thrown up annually was thus shown to be, in some places, about 901 tons per acre; at other points it was a good deal less than this, but in still other parts it amounted to no less than 3,145 tons per acre. If all the sand thus passed through the bodies of these animals in the course of twelve months were spread out it would give an average thickness of not less than thirteen inches. How many and various are the changes produced in the sand by the wonderful activity of these industrious worms it is impossible to say. But it is easy to see how the presence of such creatures in large numbers operate with other forces to produce a kind of order on the surface of the earth, and to replace crudeness by beauty. The thing that strikes one most, however, is the magnitude of the results which can be produced in a short time when a large number of separate individuals work in co-operation by the same methods toward the same end.—London Hospital.

The Most Valuable and Remarkable Premium Ever Offered Free with any Periodical.
A MARVEL IN BOOK-MAKING.
A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, IN 12 LARGE VOLUMES, FREE.

There has just been published A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, in Large and Handsome Volumes, printed from entirely new plates, with new type. By special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer to our patrons this splendid set of Dickens' Works, postpaid, free. Charles Dickens was the greatest novelist who ever lived. No author before or since his time has won the fame that he achieved, and his works are even more popular to-day than during his lifetime. They abound in wit, humor, pathos, masterly delineation of character, vivid descriptions of places and incidents, thrilling and skilfully wrought plots. Each book is intensely interesting. No home should be without a set of these great and remarkable works. Not to have read them is to be far behind the age in which we live. The twelve volumes in this set contain the following world-famous works, each one of which is published complete, unchanged and absolutely unabridged:

DAVID COPPERFIELD,
MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT,
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY,
DOMBEY AND SON,
BLEAK HOUSE,
LITTLE DORRIT,
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND,
PICKWICK PAPERS,
BARNABY RUDGE AND CHRISTMAS STORIES,

This is the grandest offer ever made, and the greatest bargain ever offered. Up to this time the price of a complete set of Dickens' Works has been ten dollars or more. The use of modern, improved printing, folding and stitching machinery, the present extremely low price of white paper, and the great competition in the book trade are the factors which made this wonderful offer possible. Bear in mind that we offer, not a single volume, but the entire set of twelve volumes all free to subscribers. All may now afford the luxury of owning a handsome set of Dickens' works. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Do not neglect or put off this wonderful opportunity. Send at once; you will be delighted with the charming books, and, as long as you live, never cease to regard it as the best investment of a dollar you ever made. Address all communications to and write, and are possessed of fair intelligence, you are fully qualified to make a grand success of what we offer you. We have lately published at great expense, and labor a perfect wonder in the way of an illustrated Gift Book, suitable to all classes, an ornament to any home, and at a price that brings it within the reach of all, even those of moderate means. Heretofore only those who indulged in luxuries have felt that they could afford a book of this class, as they are sold in book stores at $5.00 and upwards. The book which we offer is not in any way inferior to those above referred to, but is far superior to hundreds of books of this nature that are sold at prices exceeding ours by an enormous per cent. It is selling with a rush wherever shown. Agents have only to show the book and mention the price, and it sells on its merits without further talking. No better Christmas, New Year's or Birthday present can be selected. It will sell, not only for holiday trade, but at all seasons of the year, for the reason that all will want it in their homes, and will have it as soon as they know the low price at which our agents can furnish them. Reader if you need profitable employment, and a business in which you can and will take pride, as well as make money rapidly, do not fail to send for circulars containing private terms to agents, and full information which will be sent FREE upon application. Old and new agents alike are making handsome salaries—yes, fortunes. Many of those who are making the best records are new at the agency business, having had no previous experience. Make a start—the field is entirely new. No such terms have been offered agents as we now offer on this wonderful book. Special qualifications not necessary, for it sells everywhere at sight. Perhaps you have at some time been unsuccessful at the agency business. If so, there is every reason why you should try this, the PRINCE of gift books, as failure is impossible if you make A START. Write us to-day, study our circulars and directions, then order an outfit and go to work with push and energy. You may make the greatest mistake of your life, if you allow this GOLDEN opportunity to pass unimproved.

Now let the legislature repeal the infamous Grubb's libel law, that was made on purpose to give a small soul a cowardly advantage over newspaper men.

NO OTHER administration has lost as many by death as Harrison's, including his own family, and of members of his cabinet. The list is fifteen deaths in all, including seven employes in the White house, and Mrs. Harrison and her father.

MORE trouble on the Mexican border now. Bandits from there locate on the American side, and from there make raids over the river, and when cornered return to this side. Uncle Sam owes it to his reputation for fairness to put a stop to this.

A CANADIAN blacksmith has found out the lost art of tempering copper. The old mound builders, and other ancient people could do this, but the art was lost and nobody could temper this metal till now. It may prove of great value,

THE apportionment case that had been brought up to the supreme court from Henry county during the campaign was finished in supreme court last week. The court decided they had a right to pass on the law that districts a state, as well as on any, and so they said that the apportionments of 1879 and 1891 were unconstitutional, and of course that of 1885 would be also. This will compel this legislature to make up the districts anew. But the right of the court to pass on such a law is very doubtful.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Her Last Trot.

Geo. Lanning had the misfortune to lose his family horse last week. It was a valuable animal and a great pet in the family, but had become incurable from some sort of paralytic disease and so he had it chloroformed. She had at one time been a great trotter, and it was sad to see the old time spirit come on again in death. As she lay on her side, in as comfortable a position as they could give her and as they stood by to watch her life go out under the effect of the powerful drug, they were amazed at the action of her legs, giving the regular trotting stroke, and made all the more forcible, by her feet striking the partition that was within reach. They stopped and listened. The rythmic strokes of the trot gained in rapidly and intensity for a short time, then gradually slacked up as if she had passed the wire and had nothing to do but stop and hear the shouts of triumph over a heat won. As the patter of hoofs grew slower and fainter, then stopped—they looked at her—she was dead. She had trotted her last heat, the only one for many a long year, and possibly died in the belief that she had scored another victory so dear to all horses. Who shall say how much of human thoughts, passions, feelings and even aspirations may exist in an intelligent animal? It will be long before Mr Lanning forgets the death scene of his favorite horse.

The Children on Christmas.

Saturday evening they had even finer entertainments at the churches than usual. We can speak, however, from a personal view, of that at the Presbyterian church. They had no "tree" but a "sleigh" instead, and there were fine decorations. A big, white star of Bethlehem hung up at the rear, and over the front of the stand hung the words "A Merry Christmas." The little folks did splendidly. There were the "Brownies," little folks dressed to represent these pleasant little citizens made so familiar to us by the pictures and rhymes of Palmer Cox. The talent displayed in their make up was a credit to the older people who did it, as was the way the little folks did their part. Then there was the pretty scene of lighting the Christmas candles, and that of crowning the Angel of Prayer, all being beautiful and impressive. But the hit of the evening was the little duet, if we may use such a term. Little Aileen Garwood and Master Braddie Ralston sang a duet the quaker song "Reuben I have been a thinkin," and they did it so capitally that they took the house by storm. Veterans could not have improved it. The whole evenings entertainment was highly enjoyable.

End of Volume XXII.

Next week, volume twenty-two of the COURIER closes. What a good time it would be for all who owe a year, or two years, to remember the old reliable paper that for twenty years has been taken, each week, to the postoffice and sent out. That means that this paper has been carried to the office 1144 times, besides the odd 53 numbers that will happen as it did last year. Yes, we would like to get our accounts as nearly square as we can. But if a man is hard up, we will not press him. Yet there are some who are not trying to pay, and with such, we shall have to make other arrangements, for we cannot carry on our books, such as do not mean to pay. Now at the holidays will be a good time for distant subscribers to send in their postal notes, etc., and proper credit will be given. None of these hints are for our friends who are already closely paid up, but a gentle reminder for those who are "in the rear."

Notice of Stockholders' Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that the fourth annual meeting of the stockholders of the Auburn District Fair will be held in Gandy's Hall, Auburn, Ind., on the third Thursday, Jan, 1893, the same being the 19th day of said month at 10 a. m. to elect the following officers for the ensuing year: one president, one secretary, one vice-president, one treasurer and a board of twenty directors, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before this meeting.

Silver Anniversary.

REV A. YOUNG, of Garrett, will celebrate his silver jubilee, on Jan. 1. 1893, when it will be 25 years that he was ordained priest. Of this twenty-five years, he has spent twenty years and five months in DeKalb county. Fourteen years he lived at Auburn and six years at Garrett.

First Wheat in America.

The first wheat raised in the new world was sown in the Island of Isabella in January, 1494, and on March 30, the ears were gathered. The foundation of the great wheat industry of Mexico is said to have been three grains carried into that country by one of the slaves of the Cortez company. The first crop of wheat raised in South America was sown by a monk in the garden of a convent at Quito. Garcillaz affirms that up to 1653 wheaten bread had never been used as an article of diet by the people of Peru.

A Remarkable History.

We recently published a strongly commendatory notice of "Alden's Cyclopedia of History." In the interest of our readers we wish to repeat and emphasize what we said. A good Universal History ought to be in every home; this is certainly excellent, if not the very best for general use and reference ever published, covering all nations (except the United States, to be published separately) and from B. C 4004 to A. D. 1892. Certainly it is the cheapest historical work we have ever seen; but that is what readers generally will expect from Mr Alden, who has done so much to place the highest class of literature within popular reach. To give such a vast amount of matter within such small compass the type used is necessarily small but it is beautifully clear, and the paper, printing and binding are of the best. Send 10 cents to Mr Alden and he will send you a sample volume of 160 pages, containing the history of several nations complete, by which you can judge for yourself whether you want the entire work. His catalogue of choice books, 128 pages, sent post-paid for 2 cents, presents a wonderful feast for book lovers. Address JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 57 Rose St, New York.

DRESSMAKING: Miss Minnie Knoder and her sister, Mrs. Allie [illegible], will do dressmaking, and ask the ladies of Auburn to give them a share of their patronage. Rooms at Mrs. [illegible], on North Main street

Commissioners met Monday to finish up bridge settlements, all being present. Tuesday the remainder of the work was done by Mr. Lockwood and Mr. Henderson. Among other work is the letting of the construction of a road. See notice in this week's paper.

Chester C. Smith of Loraine, O., and Grace Green of Auburn, were united in marriage at the residence of R. W. Cobb by Rev. A. S. Wooton, Dec. 27. It was a splendid affair and the excellent supper was no exception to this. A small company of friends were present.

WANTED: Your wheat, oats, corn and buckwheat at the flouring mills, south of Wabash R. R., for which I will pay the top price. Also your custom work, guaranteeing quantity and quality. Give the mill a trial and be convinced.

Wm. Ditmars, a brother to the late John A. Dittmars, died at his home near Wooster, Ohio, on Christmas day, of heart disease. He was an uncle of Mrs. R. S. S. Reed, Peter Dittmars, Mrs N. Ensley, Mrs. Isaac Shaffer and Mrs. Ober, and had many acquaintances here.

For instance, Mrs. Chas. Rogers, of Bay City, Mich., accidently spilled scalding water over her little boy. She promptly applied DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, giving instant relief. It's a wonderfully good salve for burns, bruises, sores and a sure cure for piles. Robbins & McCord.

Wallace W. Robbins, formerly of Auburn, is a candidate for the appointment of adjutant-general of the state. He was a soldier in the war, and for at least one of his terms in the legislature, chairman of the committee on military affairs, and altogether is well fitted for the place. We hope he will get it.

We had written last week a notice of the burning of David Thomas' barn, Monday night in which the two horses of Mr. Lavene, were burned to death, but the article was overlooked. It seems terrible that the two animals should meet such an awful death. Lavene also lost two wagons, and Mr Thomas some furniture and farm tools. Both were partly insured. As the building was half burned when first seen, of course the engine could do nothing, though promptly at the spot.

We don't believe another paper in the state, except the COURIER, has a subscriber who paid his subscription this year in raisins. Last week Wm. Ensley of Butler township, paid his in that way bringing us a market basket full of as fine raisins as can be found. They were grown and prepared by his brother, J. P. Ensley, at Ontario, Calif., a former Auburn boy. Recently William got from his brother, 3,500 pounds of this fine fruit, or one and three-quarters tons. He is selling them out to any parties who want, and has already disposed of a large part of them. They are not only nice but extremely cheap, and many of Mr. Ensley's neighbors have invested liberally. Anyone can judge for himself by calling on Mr. Ensley.

PEOPLE who go to New York for the purpose of buying counterfeit money are having much distress lately. Not only do they get arrested, but the local papers write long stories about them, heartlessly calling them jays. Without doubt this expression lacks refinement, but there gleams through its crude and unfeeling aspect a radiant truth that almost redeems it.

THE Michigan election expense law has not been made half so ridiculous by those who have treated it lightly as by some of those who obeyed it, or swear they have. One candidate, for instance, in the interior of the State—a successful one, too—makes a long-winded affidavit that his expenses amounted to twenty-eight cents for postage and forty cents for the circulation of campaign papers. What his fellow-citizens meant by electing such a monument of reckless extravagance is a profound mystery.

THE late Duke of Marlborough left on record an enthusiastic monograph of American trotting horses, which he wished to see introduced very generally into England. But it would take many authoritative voices to persuade John Bull that he should speed along in a light four-wheeled wagon at a pace which would not allow him to see the horse's heels. John likes to go more slowly, and thinks that his dignity requires more ponderous fixtures for his rolling gear and harnesses than we should ever be satisfied with. He likes to read about Sunol and Maud S., but he would consider it reckless to sit behind them.

NEW HAMPSHIRE has begun in earnest to take measures for the presrvation of the forests which deck the mountain-sides of the State, and constitute, with mountains, its chief glory and attraction. Primarily the movement had its inception in an honest desire to preserve the beauty of the State; but it has been greatly aided by the argument that if the forests go the tourists will cease to come. This is a plea which the practical, as well as the aesthetic, can appreciate; for the tourist is the milch cow, so to speak, of the New Hampshire people. Their chief industry during the summer months is boarding him and helping him run up bills for horse hire, and the long, cold winter is spent mainly in getting ready for his next advent. All honor to the Granite State for the taste which impells it to save the forests, and due credit to its shrewdness in preserving one of its chief sources of income.

A CAREFULLY prepared decision was handed down by Judge Gresham, interpreting the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This decision goes farther than protecting the violators of the interstate commerce act from being obliged to criminate themselves by producing their books in evidence of such violation, for Judge Gresham holds that the regular national judiciary cannot be subordinated to the purposes of the commission. The latter, he says, is an administrative not a judicial body, and it is not competent for Congress to confer upon such a body authority which is not strictly judicial and clearly within the grant found in the third article of the Federal Constitution. Between the Brewer, Riner, and Gresham decisions there is not much left of the interstate commerce act. Evidently Congress should start in and build another statute from the ground up, founding it upon the solid rock of constitutional law, and see if it cannot get one which will be able to withstand the shock of judicial wind and water.

Japanese Fans.

Only one cent for a fan! Yet it is strongly made of twenty-five strips of bamboo, with two thicker ones at the ends, the latter having on them a polish of black lacquer. The strips are held together by a rivet, forming a hinge, on which the fan opens and closes. The upper ends of the strips are covered with two layers of tough paper, painted in four colors representing flowers, the top edge touched with another color. How can such an article, brought from Japan to this country, be sold at so low a price with profit? In the first place, bamboo grows plentifully in Japan; it is easily split by a hand-and-foot machine, and hundred of thousands strips can be made in a day. The Japanese excel in the making of strong or tough paper, and in painting rapidly by a stamping process, the flowers upon it. The putting together of the fan is done by machinery, and the cost of the labor is almost nothing whem compared with the pay of American workmen. The cheap fans are used as packing for more expensive goods, as porcelain jars, and as they pack closely, a large number can go inside and around one umbrella stand, so there is no cost for the freight of the fans. Although there is thirty-five per cent. duty on both the porcelain and packing, the invoice price of the latter is so small that the duty amounts to little. The fan packing is then sold here in job lots, and the peddlers get them for a mere nothing. That is why they can sell them so cheaply. Even at one cent, the realized price is much higher than the Japanese charge for them in large quantites.

DUTY OF DEMOCRATS.

ROGER Q. MILLS POINTS OUT A PLAIN PATH.

Some Light Thrown on the Inner Workings of the Tariff—Binder Twine and Rope Should Be Put on the Free List—Remove the Barriers to Commerce.

What Democrats Must Do.

"We must show to the people of the United States that we were honest in the declarations upon which they gave us the administration of the Government in all departments.

"We must arrange taxation for the single purpose of raising revenue for the Government. We must show to them that we were sincere when we said that taxes should not be levied for the purpose of protecting anybody against competition.

"To do our duty will call for only an ordinary amount of intelligence, but an extraordinary amount of courage. In proceeding to formulnte a measure that shall take the place of the present sytem of tariff taxes, we must keep uppermost the principle of the right of the American people to labor and to market the product of their labor.

"The problem to-day is that the productive efficiency of the people of the United States is so great that in a part of the year it brings forth more than will satisfy all our people for the whole year. Barriers have been placed in the way of their marketing elsewhere what they produce during the rest of the year, and they must be removed. In order to do that we must take the heavy penalties off goods coming into this country. By the same act that you prohibit importation you make impossible exportation.

"We must take the tax off every raw material that enters into the manufacture of goods that we produce. Coal, the metals, and all the fibers must be put on the free list, and so must all of those things that enter into the manufacturing of the articles in which the skill of the American laborer is superior to the skill of the laborer of any other country. Then, too, the taxes must be taken off finished goods that are of common necessity in so far as those taxes are purely protective. All this must be done because our people now appreciate that when you put a high tax on an article and that article comes into this country to be sold something must pay for it, tariff, tax, and all, and they know that the payment must come from the surplus of American labor, as it is now and has long been coming.

"The Democratic party has wisdom enough. It has too much prudence. For thirty years, truth compels me to say that there has been cowardice in the leadership of the Democratic party. Grover Cleveland was elected because the people appreciated that he had the courage to do what was right.

"The people have issued the edict that there must be a tariff system which will reduce their burdens to a minimum. It is to carry out their edict that they put the Democratic party in power. If that party fails to do this the people will bury it four years from now deeper than they buried the Republican party last November."—Roger Q. Mills, at the Reform Club dinner.

Kill the Cordage Trust.

There is no moral or financial reason why binder twine and rope should not at once be put upon the free list. The only reasons for retaining these duties in the McKinley bill were political ones. These are no longer operative, for the incoming administration will depend upon its fidelity to public trusts and not upon the boodle that it can fry out of favored trusts, to secure the good-will and the votes of the people.

We can and do make cordage cheaper than any other nation. We export it to all parts of the earth. The duty then serves only to make possible a trust, which has existed since 1887, with power to extort from American consumers. The Cordage Trust has done this in the most approved manner. It owned and gained control of forty-nine factories, all in Canada, and but eleven in the United States. It bribed manufacturers of cordage machinery not to sell to outsiders for five years. It paid John Goode $250,000 a year to hold his big plant idle. It closed up half of its mills to restrict production and sustain its abnormally high prices. It gained control of the supply of manila fiber for several years and dictated prices to manufacturers not in the trust. It has this year a corner in sisal hemp and holds the price at 6 cents, while the price of white sisal twine is less than 8 cents to jobbers. It made $1,406,313 profits in 1891 on a nominal capital of $15,000,000 and an actual capital of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. This trust, sustained by duties of from 7-10 to 2 1-12 cents per pound, is the enemy of the farmer, of labor, and of the honest manufacturer. It paid for special legislation by big contributions to Republican campaign corruption funds. It subsidized and bribed on all sides, and got even and ahead by plundering the helpless consumer.

It is safe to say that no representative of this greedy monopoly will show his head in the next Congress, and that if he does he will meet with a cold reception. It is evident that this great trust expects to be handled without gloves. The Cordage Trade Journal of Dec. 1, 1892, expresses the belief not only that binder twine will be made free, but that it will probably be done at an extra session of Congress. It also says that the duty on rope "may attract the attention of politicians" after the binder twine duty is disposed of. In discussing the binder twine situation, this journal says:

"At the first session of this Congress the Democratic House, as is well known, passed a bill placing binder twine on the free list; the bill went to the Senate, where it remains, no action having been taken upon it. There is a possibility that enough Republican Senators, having read the signs of the times as shown by the result of the late unpleasantness, will vote with the Democratic members of the Senate to pass the bill and place it in the hands of President Harrison for his sanction or veto. Should the present Senate take this action the date that the law will take effect may be fixed at March or April 1, 1893, although the strongest probability is that July 1, 1893, will be the date decided upon."

Reduce the Tariff in 1893.

What, then, are the teachings of history and of common sense with reference to the course of the new administration? It is absolutely certain that the new Congress will make some great change in the tariff; but, until that change is actually made, the greatest uncertainty will prevail as to its precise direction. That wool will be made free and the additional tax on tin plates be repealed everybody can foresee, but beyond this all is darkness. If nothing is to be attempted before the assembling of the new Congress in December, 1893, it is certain that the new tariff, whatever it may be, will not be enacted until June, 1894; and if the nonsense which is now gravely brought forward as to necessary delay in its taking effect is to be respected, no change would really take place until Jan. 1, 1895. The result is obvious to any man who has eyes to see. The new industries which the McKinley bill was intended to create will not be created; the importations will be restricted by the enormous duties, the people will be heavily burdened by useless taxation, and will gain none of the relief which they might have gained if the McKinley bill had been left alone, by increased, although unnatural, domestic production. The protected manufacturers generally will be kept for two years in a state of nervous apprehension; the cost of their materials will be increased rather than diminished; they will very properly be careful about extending their production, because, when the new tariff once takes effect, their rivals will have cheaper materials and cheaper machinery, by the aid of which to undersell those who paid high prices; and there will be as much stagnation as it is possible to have in a country so progressive as our own.

Nobody seems to know anything about the history of the tariff of 1846 and its political effect. The facts are that the Polk administration adopted the conservative course now recommended by wiseacres, doing nothing until the regular session of Congress, deliberating a long time, passing the new tariff in July, 1846, and postponing its operation until December. The result was, naturally enough, that the manufacturers of the country were kept in a state of agonizing suspense for nearly two years; that for eighteen months nobody knew whether a new tariff would be enacted or not; that nobody derived the smallest benefit from the new tariff until after the Congressional elections of 1846, while everybody felt the depressing effect of uncertainty as to the future. The next consequence was that the Democratic party suffered an overwhelming defeat in the elections of October and November, 1846, the House of Representatives, which had a Democratic majority of about sixty in 1844, being transferred to the Whigs in 1846; and a reactionary movement was thus started which, notwithstanding the fact that when the new tariff actually went into operation the prosperity of the country was vastly increased, resulted in the election of a Whig President in 1848. It is quite true that the folly of the Polk administration in provoking the Mexican war contributed very largely to the general result; but it is none the less true that the Democrats would have retained their majority in 1846, if they had properly settled the tariff question in 1845.

I have no fears for the ultimate issue of the tariff controversy. The Whig victories of 1846 and 1848 were entirely barren: the tariff of 1846 triumphantly vindicated itself; and it would have been irrepealable but for the great civil war of 1861. So I am absolutely confident that the new tariff, whether adopted in 1893 or 1894, will stand. But why should we run any risk of reaction and imperil the prospects of the party of tariff reform, even for the year 1894? Let us have prompt action and thorough reform, so that the people may get and feel the full benefit of our ideas. This is one of the cases in which half measures, as Mills has wisely said, not only do not produce half results, but produce no results at all.—Extract from a letter of Thos. G. Shearman to the New York Evening Post.

The Battle of November 8.

"Stirred by these moral forces, came forth the rank and file of the Democratic party, the honest masses whose enthusiasm for a good cause and a worthy leader brushed away like cobwebs all opposition and all feeble considerations of expediency in the party councils. Then came forth the 'Independents,' the men who, as has been said of Edmund Burke, 'sometimes change their front, but never change their ground,' the men who, in struggling for good government, had the courage to expose themselves to the pelting storms of political warfare without the shelter of a party roof over their heads; the men whom the partisan politician calls 'those enlightened, unselfish and patriotic citizens who rise above party,' provided they rise above the other party, but whom he calls 'a lot of dudes and Pharisees amounting to nothing' when they happen to rise above his own party.

"And among them came the college professor, the disinterested man of studious thought, the truest representative of the intellectual honesty of the country—the college professor whom the Republican party had called its own when it was the party of moral ideas, but whom it now affects to despise as an impracticable theorist, since it has become the party of immoral practices. Indeed, a significant spectacle it is; on one side, with few individual exceptions, Harvard and Yale, and Columbia and Amherst, and Cornell and Ann Arbor, and many more; and on the other side, the high and mighty tariff, with Maj. McKinley as the professor of its science, with Matt Quay and Dave Martin as the exponents of its politics, and with John Wanamaker as the illustration of its sanctity. But still more came; thousands of old Republicans, who reluctantly severed the ties binding them to the party to which they had been long and warmly attached, and who, obeying the voice of their consciences, went where they could serve the public good.

"Thus, at the call of the moral forces in politics, was the powerful combination of elements formed to which the Democratic cause and the Democratic candidate owe their triumphant success."—Carl Schurz, at annual dinner of the Reform Club.

Inner Workings of the Tariff.

A report of the Board of General Appraisers of Customs to the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ended Oct. 31, 1892, throws much light upon the inner workings of the tariff system. The report shows that during the year in question 45,995 protests were made against the classification of goods by the custom house officials. These protests covered nearly all classes of imports, and their multitude shows how great is the confusion in the administration of the tariff. Besides the protests against wrongful classification, there were during the year 2,090 appeals against assessments of values by the local appraisers. In 573 of these cases the action of the local appraisers was sustained by the general board; in 796 cases the decisions were sustained in part; in 86 cases the valuations of the local appraisers were increased; and in 446 cases the claims of the importers were confirmed. In 17 cases the appeals against the custom house valuations were withdrawn, and in 172 cases the decision of the Board of Appraisers is still pending.

The extent of the embarrassment to trade by the incessant conflicts over a vastly complicated machinery of tariff laws and custom house administration is almost incalculable. The importing merchants find themselves harassed beyond measure by stupid and inconsistent decisions which delay their business operations, while they are not infrequently the victims of official dishonesty and blackmail. Under a wise and just system of revenue laws most of the conflicts over the administration of the customs laws would disappear. It is not strange that the great commercial interests of the country should have risen in earnest protest against the maintenance of the McKinley tariff and its multitudinous abuses.—Philadelphia Record.

Men Are on the Free List.

One claim may as well be disposed of at once. Protectionists claim that the tariff protects American labor against foreign competion. Does it? There is no tariff on laborers. There is absolute free trade in labor—the one thing that the manufacturer has to buy, and the one thing the laborer has to sell. But the manufacturer says we keep out foreign work. Well, when does the foreign laborer most interfere with your job—when he is thousands of miles away, working by hand or with poor machinery, producing goods that have to be transported thousands of miles before they come into our markets? or when he has come here as an immigrant and stands ready to work right by your side on the very machine you work with, to make the very goods you are making? When does he most interfere with your job?—when he stays a foreigner thousands of miles off? or when he comes here and bids against you? How does it help the employer most—to have him stay at home in Europe? or to have him here underbidding you?

So, when your employers tell you that the tariff is to protect your labor, you know better. You did not make those laws, they did; and they left them in such shape that they could buy your labor as cheaply as possible. Their attitude, when frank, is summed in the speech of the gentleman who has been their leader in Congress, Hon. Wm. D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, who, in the House of Representatives, when reminded that there was no tariff on labor, said:

"Yes, men are on the free list. They cost us not even freight. . . . We promote free trade in men, and it is the only free trade I am prepared to promote."—Hon. John DeWitt Warner.

Manufacturers Not Cast Down.

The World has on one or two occasions called attention to the cheerful frame of mind in which the iron and steel manufacturers find themselves since election. We now add some testimony as to a similar feeling on the part of sensible woolen manufacturers.

The following extract is taken from an editorial entitled "Is Woolen Industry to Be Prosperous?" published in the American Wool and Cotton Reporter of Nov. 24th:

"It is safe to assume that the Democratic party will not legislate against the best interests of the country, and that there will be no legislation which will be destructive of vested interests. The aim and purpose of the Democratic party is the same as that of the Republican party—the difference between the two parties is wholly one of policy and not of purpose, and the best interests of the Democratic party are identical with those of the country—and they lie in the direction of preserving our manufacturing industries, and also in furthering their growth under what they regard as healthy and constitutional limits. It is very probable that under a tariff based even upon entirely free raw material and reasonable duties on manufactured goods, there will be a larger and more ample net protection than the woolen manufacture has had in years. There is a vast difference between an apparent protection, as in the McKinley bill, and an absolute protection which may be obtained under a far lower rate of duties than we now have."

No comment on this is necessary, except, perhaps, an expression of wonder at the ease with which our Protectionist friends are bringing themselves to the condition of veracity.—New York World.

The Plate Glass Trust.

The reports in the daily newspapers that the American Plate Glass Manufacturers' Association has been dissolved is the merest figment of reportorial imagination. The association is not only alive but will regulate the output so as to prevent a glutting of the plate glass market. It met during the week, reaffirmed prices, and agreed to curtail the product on the lines agreed upon at the last meeting.—National Glass Budget.

PEOPLE who go to New York for the purpose of buying counterfeit money are having much distress lately. Not only do they get arrested, but the local papers write long stories about them, heartlessly calling them jays. Without doubt this expression lacks refinement, but there gleams through its crude and unfeeling aspect a radiant truth that almost redeems it.

THE Michigan election expense law has not been made half so ridiculous by those who have treated it lightly as by some of those who obeyed it, or swear they have. One candidate, for instance, in the interior of the State—a successful one, too—makes a long-winded affidavit that his expenses amounted to twenty-eight cents for postage and forty cents for the circulation of campaign papers. What his fellow-citizens meant by electing such a monument of reckless extravagance is a profound mystery.

THE late Duke of Marlborough left on record an enthusiastic monograph of American trotting horses, which he wished to see introduced very generally into England. But it would take many authoritative voices to persuade John Bull that he should speed along in a light four-wheeled wagon at a pace which would not allow him to see the horse's heels. John likes to go more slowly, and thinks that his dignity requires more ponderous fixtures for his rolling gear and harnesses than we should ever be satisfied with. He likes to read about Sunol and Maud S., but he would consider it reckless to sit behind them.

NEW HAMPSHIRE has begun in earnest to take measures for the presrvation of the forests which deck the mountain-sides of the State, and constitute, with mountains, its chief glory and attraction. Primarily the movement had its inception in an honest desire to preserve the beauty of the State; but it has been greatly aided by the argument that if the forests go the tourists will cease to come. This is a plea which the practical, as well as the aesthetic, can appreciate; for the tourist is the milch cow, so to speak, of the New Hampshire people. Their chief industry during the summer months is boarding him and helping him run up bills for horse hire, and the long, cold winter is spent mainly in getting ready for his next advent. All honor to the Granite State for the taste which impells it to save the forests, and due credit to its shrewdness in preserving one of its chief sources of income.

A CAREFULLY prepared decision was handed down by Judge Gresham, interpreting the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This decision goes farther than protecting the violators of the interstate commerce act from being obliged to criminate themselves by producing their books in evidence of such violation, for Judge Gresham holds that the regular national judiciary cannot be subordinated to the purposes of the commission. The latter, he says, is an administrative not a judicial body, and it is not competent for Congress to confer upon such a body authority which is not strictly judicial and clearly within the grant found in the third article of the Federal Constitution. Between the Brewer, Riner, and Gresham decisions there is not much left of the interstate commerce act. Evidently Congress should start in and build another statute from the ground up, founding it upon the solid rock of constitutional law, and see if it cannot get one which will be able to withstand the shock of judicial wind and water.

Japanese Fans.

Only one cent for a fan! Yet it is strongly made of twenty-five strips of bamboo, with two thicker ones at the ends, the latter having on them a polish of black lacquer. The strips are held together by a rivet, forming a hinge, on which the fan opens and closes. The upper ends of the strips are covered with two layers of tough paper, painted in four colors representing flowers, the top edge touched with another color. How can such an article, brought from Japan to this country, be sold at so low a price with profit? In the first place, bamboo grows plentifully in Japan; it is easily split by a hand-and-foot machine, and hundred of thousands strips can be made in a day. The Japanese excel in the making of strong or tough paper, and in painting rapidly by a stamping process, the flowers upon it. The putting together of the fan is done by machinery, and the cost of the labor is almost nothing whem compared with the pay of American workmen. The cheap fans are used as packing for more expensive goods, as porcelain jars, and as they pack closely, a large number can go inside and around one umbrella stand, so there is no cost for the freight of the fans. Although there is thirty-five per cent. duty on both the porcelain and packing, the invoice price of the latter is so small that the duty amounts to little. The fan packing is then sold here in job lots, and the peddlers get them for a mere nothing. That is why they can sell them so cheaply. Even at one cent, the realized price is much higher than the Japanese charge for them in large quantites.

DUTY OF DEMOCRATS.

ROGER Q. MILLS POINTS OUT A PLAIN PATH.

Some Light Thrown on the Inner Workings of the Tariff—Binder Twine and Rope Should Be Put on the Free List—Remove the Barriers to Commerce.

What Democrats Must Do.

"We must show to the people of the United States that we were honest in the declarations upon which they gave us the administration of the Government in all departments.

"We must arrange taxation for the single purpose of raising revenue for the Government. We must show to them that we were sincere when we said that taxes should not be levied for the purpose of protecting anybody against competition.

"To do our duty will call for only an ordinary amount of intelligence, but an extraordinary amount of courage. In proceeding to formulnte a measure that shall take the place of the present sytem of tariff taxes, we must keep uppermost the principle of the right of the American people to labor and to market the product of their labor.

"The problem to-day is that the productive efficiency of the people of the United States is so great that in a part of the year it brings forth more than will satisfy all our people for the whole year. Barriers have been placed in the way of their marketing elsewhere what they produce during the rest of the year, and they must be removed. In order to do that we must take the heavy penalties off goods coming into this country. By the same act that you prohibit importation you make impossible exportation.

"We must take the tax off every raw material that enters into the manufacture of goods that we produce. Coal, the metals, and all the fibers must be put on the free list, and so must all of those things that enter into the manufacturing of the articles in which the skill of the American laborer is superior to the skill of the laborer of any other country. Then, too, the taxes must be taken off finished goods that are of common necessity in so far as those taxes are purely protective. All this must be done because our people now appreciate that when you put a high tax on an article and that article comes into this country to be sold something must pay for it, tariff, tax, and all, and they know that the payment must come from the surplus of American labor, as it is now and has long been coming.

"The Democratic party has wisdom enough. It has too much prudence. For thirty years, truth compels me to say that there has been cowardice in the leadership of the Democratic party. Grover Cleveland was elected because the people appreciated that he had the courage to do what was right.

"The people have issued the edict that there must be a tariff system which will reduce their burdens to a minimum. It is to carry out their edict that they put the Democratic party in power. If that party fails to do this the people will bury it four years from now deeper than they buried the Republican party last November."—Roger Q. Mills, at the Reform Club dinner.

Kill the Cordage Trust.

There is no moral or financial reason why binder twine and rope should not at once be put upon the free list. The only reasons for retaining these duties in the McKinley bill were political ones. These are no longer operative, for the incoming administration will depend upon its fidelity to public trusts and not upon the boodle that it can fry out of favored trusts, to secure the good-will and the votes of the people.

We can and do make cordage cheaper than any other nation. We export it to all parts of the earth. The duty then serves only to make possible a trust, which has existed since 1887, with power to extort from American consumers. The Cordage Trust has done this in the most approved manner. It owned and gained control of forty-nine factories, all in Canada, and but eleven in the United States. It bribed manufacturers of cordage machinery not to sell to outsiders for five years. It paid John Goode $250,000 a year to hold his big plant idle. It closed up half of its mills to restrict production and sustain its abnormally high prices. It gained control of the supply of manila fiber for several years and dictated prices to manufacturers not in the trust. It has this year a corner in sisal hemp and holds the price at 6 cents, while the price of white sisal twine is less than 8 cents to jobbers. It made $1,406,313 profits in 1891 on a nominal capital of $15,000,000 and an actual capital of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. This trust, sustained by duties of from 7-10 to 2 1-12 cents per pound, is the enemy of the farmer, of labor, and of the honest manufacturer. It paid for special legislation by big contributions to Republican campaign corruption funds. It subsidized and bribed on all sides, and got even and ahead by plundering the helpless consumer.

It is safe to say that no representative of this greedy monopoly will show his head in the next Congress, and that if he does he will meet with a cold reception. It is evident that this great trust expects to be handled without gloves. The Cordage Trade Journal of Dec. 1, 1892, expresses the belief not only that binder twine will be made free, but that it will probably be done at an extra session of Congress. It also says that the duty on rope "may attract the attention of politicians" after the binder twine duty is disposed of. In discussing the binder twine situation, this journal says:

"At the first session of this Congress the Democratic House, as is well known, passed a bill placing binder twine on the free list; the bill went to the Senate, where it remains, no action having been taken upon it. There is a possibility that enough Republican Senators, having read the signs of the times as shown by the result of the late unpleasantness, will vote with the Democratic members of the Senate to pass the bill and place it in the hands of President Harrison for his sanction or veto. Should the present Senate take this action the date that the law will take effect may be fixed at March or April 1, 1893, although the strongest probability is that July 1, 1893, will be the date decided upon."

Reduce the Tariff in 1893.

What, then, are the teachings of history and of common sense with reference to the course of the new administration? It is absolutely certain that the new Congress will make some great change in the tariff; but, until that change is actually made, the greatest uncertainty will prevail as to its precise direction. That wool will be made free and the additional tax on tin plates be repealed everybody can foresee, but beyond this all is darkness. If nothing is to be attempted before the assembling of the new Congress in December, 1893, it is certain that the new tariff, whatever it may be, will not be enacted until June, 1894; and if the nonsense which is now gravely brought forward as to necessary delay in its taking effect is to be respected, no change would really take place until Jan. 1, 1895. The result is obvious to any man who has eyes to see. The new industries which the McKinley bill was intended to create will not be created; the importations will be restricted by the enormous duties, the people will be heavily burdened by useless taxation, and will gain none of the relief which they might have gained if the McKinley bill had been left alone, by increased, although unnatural, domestic production. The protected manufacturers generally will be kept for two years in a state of nervous apprehension; the cost of their materials will be increased rather than diminished; they will very properly be careful about extending their production, because, when the new tariff once takes effect, their rivals will have cheaper materials and cheaper machinery, by the aid of which to undersell those who paid high prices; and there will be as much stagnation as it is possible to have in a country so progressive as our own.

Nobody seems to know anything about the history of the tariff of 1846 and its political effect. The facts are that the Polk administration adopted the conservative course now recommended by wisecres, doing nothing until the regular session of Congress, deliberating a long time, passing the new tariff in July, 1846, and postponing its operation until December. The result was, naturally enough, that the manufacturers of the country were kept in a state of agonizing suspense for nearly two years; that for eighteen months nobody knew whether a new tariff would be enacted or not; that nobody derived the smallest benefit from the new tariff until after the Congressional elections of 1846, while everybody felt the depressing effect of uncertainty as to the future. The next consequence was that the Democratic party suffered an overwhelming defeat in the elections of October and November, 1846, the House of Representatives, which had a Democratic majority of about sixty in 1844, being transferred to the Whigs in 1846; and a reactionary movement was thus started which, notwithstanding the fact that when the new tariff actually went into operation the prosperity of the country was vastly increased, resulted in the election of a Whig President in 1848. It is quite true that the folly of the Polk administration in provoking the Mexican war contributed very largely to the general result; but it is none the less true that the Democrats would have retained their majority in 1846, if they had properly settled the tariff question in 1845.

I have no fears for the ultimate issue of the tariff controversy. The Whig victories of 1846 and 1848 were entirely barren; the tariff of 1846 triumphantly vindicated itself; and it would have been irrepealable but for the great civil war of 1861. So I am absolutely confident that the new tariff, whether adopted in 1893 or 1894, will stand. But why should we run any risk of reaction and imperil the prospects of the party of tariff reform, even for the year 1894? Let us have prompt action and thorough reform, so that the people may get and feel the full benefit of our ideas. This is one of the cases in which half measures, as Mills has wisely said, not only do not produce half results, but produce no results at all.—Extract from a letter of Thos. G. Shearman to the New York Evening Post.

The Battle of November 8.

"Stirred by these moral forces, came forth the rank and file of the Democratic party, the honest masses whose enthusiasm for a good cause and a worthy leader brushed away like cobwebs all opposition and all feeble considerations of expediency in the party councils. Then came forth the 'Independents,' the men who, as has been said of Edmund Burke, 'sometimes change their front, but never change their ground,' the men who, in struggling for good government, had the courage to expose themselves to the pelting storms of political warfare without the shelter of a party roof over their heads; the men whom the partisan politician calls 'those enlightened, unselfish and patriotic citizens who rise above party,' provided they rise above the other party, but whom he calls 'a lot of dudes and Pharisees amounting to nothing' when they happen to rise above his own party.

"And among them came the college professor, the disinterested man of studious thought, the truest representative of the intellectual honesty of the country—the college professor whom the Republican party had called its own when it was the party of moral ideas, but whom it now affects to despise as an impracticable theorist, since it has become the party of immoral practices. Indeed, a significant spectacle it is; on one side, with few individual exceptions, Harvard and Yale, and Columbia and Amherst, and Cornell and Ann Arbor, and many more; and on the other side, the high and mighty tariff, with Maj. McKinley as the professor of its science, with Matt Quay and Dave Martin as the exponents of its politics, and with John Wanamaker as the illustration of its sanctity. But still more came; thousands of old Republicans, who reluctantly severed the ties binding them to the party to which they had been long and warmly attached, and who, obeying the voice of their consciences, went where they could serve the public good.

"Thus, at the call of the moral forces in politics, was the powerful combination of elements formed to which the Democratic cause and the Democratic candidate owe their triumphant success."—Carl Schurz, at annual dinner of the Reform Club.

Inner Workings of the Tariff.

A report of the Board of General Appraisers of Customs to the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ended Oct. 31, 1892, throws much light upon the inner workings of the tariff system. The report shows that during the year in question 45,995 protests were made against the classification of goods by the custom house officials. These protests covered nearly all classes of imports, and their multitude shows how great is the confusion in the administration of the tariff. Besides the protests against wrongful classification, there were during the year 2,090 appeals against assessments of values by the local appraisers. In 573 of these cases the action of the local appraisers was sustained by the general board; in 796 cases the decisions were sustained in part; in 86 cases the valuations of the local appraisers were increased; and in 446 cases the claims of the importers were confirmed. In 17 cases the appeals against the custom house valuations were withdrawn, and in 172 cases the decision of the Board of Appraisers is still pending.

The extent of the embarrassment to trade by the incessant conflicts over a vastly complicated machinery of tariff laws and custom house administration is almost incalculable. The importing merchants find themselves harassed beyond measure by stupid and inconsistent decisions which delay their business operations, while they are not infrequently the victims of official dishonesty and blackmail. Under a wise and just system of revenue laws most of the conflicts over the administration of the customs laws would disappear. It is not strange that the great commercial interests of the country should have risen in earnest protest against the maintenance of the McKinley tariff and its multitudinous abuses.—Philadelphia Record.

Men Are on the Free List.

One claim may as well be disposed of at once. Protectionists claim that the tariff protects American labor against foreign competion. Does it? There is no tariff on laborers. There is absolute free trade in labor—the one thing that the manufacturer has to buy, and the one thing the laborer has to sell. But the manufacturer says we keep out foreign work. Well, when does the foreign laborer most interfere with your job—when he is thousands of miles away, working by hand or with poor machinery, producing goods that have to be transported thousands of miles before they come into our markets? or when he has come here as an immigrant and stands ready to work right by your side on the very machine you work with, to make the very goods you are making? When does he most interfere with your job?—when he stays a foreigner thousands of miles off? or when he comes here and bids against you? How does it help the employer most—to have him stay at home in Europe? or to have him here underbidding you?

So, when your employers tell you that the tariff is to protect your labor, you know better. You did not make those laws, they did; and they left them in such shape that they could buy your labor as cheaply as possible. Their attitude, when frank, is summed in the speech of the gentleman who has been their leader in Congress, Hon. Wm. D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, who, in the House of Representatives, when reminded that there was no tariff on labor, said:

"Yes, men are on the free list. They cost us not even freight. . . . We promote free trade in men, and it is the only free trade I am prepared to promote."—Hon. John DeWitt Warner.

Manufacturers Not Cast Down.

The World has on one or two occasions called attention to the cheerful frame of mind in which the iron and steel manufacturers find themselves since election. We now add some testimony as to a similar feeling on the part of sensible woolen manufacturers.

The following extract is taken from an editorial entitled "Is Woolen Industry to Be Prosperous?" published in the American Wool and Cotton Reporter of Nov. 24th:

"It is safe to assume that the Democratic party will not legislate against the best interests of the country, and that there will be no legislation which will be destructive of vested interests. The aim and purpose of the Democratic party is the same as that of the Republican party—the difference between the two parties is wholly one of policy and not of purpose, and the best interests of the Democratic party are identical with those of the country—and they lie in the direction of preserving our manufacturing industries, and also in furthering their growth under what they regard as healthy and constitutional limits. It is very probable that under a tariff based even upon entirely free raw material and reasonable duties on manufactured goods, there will be a larger and more ample net protection than the woolen manufacture has had in years. There is a vast difference between an apparent protection, as in the McKinley bill, and an absolute protection which may be obtained under a far lower rate of duties than we now have."

No comment on this is necessary, except, perhaps, an expression of wonder at the ease with which our Protectionist friends are bringing themselves to the condition of veracity.—New York World.

The Plate Glass Trust.

The reports in the daily newspapers that the American Plate Glass Manufacturers' Association has been dissolved is the merest figment of reportorial imagination. The association is not only alive but will regulate the output so as to prevent a glutting of the plate glass market. It met during the week, reaffirmed prices, and agreed to curtail the product on the lines agreed upon at the last meeting.—National Glass Budget.

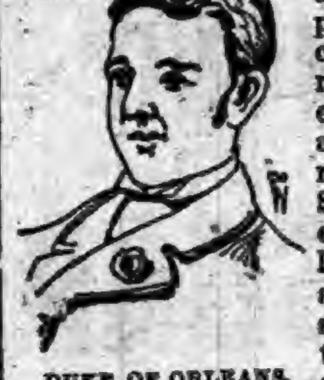
FEAR A COUP D'ETAT.

THE GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE IN DANGER.

Days of the Republic Believed to Be Numbered—Present Authorities Closely Watching the Royalists and Bonapartists —Tremendous Excitement in Paris.

Revolution May Result.

Imagine bedlam let loose in the American Senate; imagine an ex-member of the Cabinet appearing on the platform and declaring that he is not guilty of bribery; imagine a Senator arising and denouncing the ex-Secretary and several others in virulent personalities, another Senator shaking his fists at the accuser and saying, "He lies"; the whole assemblage rising to its feet and raving like Kilkenny cats, while several members promise as many other members that death awaits them—imagine this spectacle and frame the picture with a gallery full of howling onlookers and you get a fair idea of Tuesday's session in the French Chamber of Deputies.

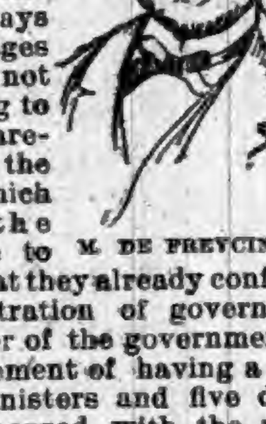


DUKE OF ORLEANS.

Violent as it is, the scene seems to be but a fair index of the feverish condition of the French Republic at the present moment. Charges and counter-charges against every one in high place are common. The air is full of exciting rumors, and the fact that ten legislators out of several hundred are now known to be implicated in the Panama scandal has stung the susceptible French mind to the conclusion that corruption is universal and republics institutions of evil growth. In the midst of the hurly-burly the Royalists have not been slow to seek their patiently awaited opportunity. There is a talk of a coup d'etat in favor of a monarchist reversion, and the young Duke of Orleans is spoken of as the most available royalist to be placed at the head.

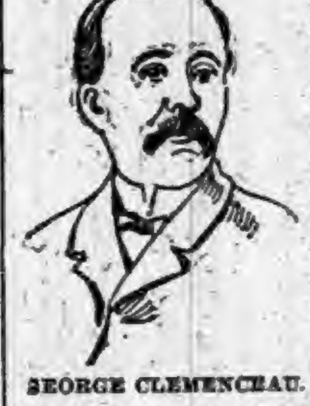
With the memory of France's past history in mind it is not difficult to see that this crisis is extremely serious. On the other hand, the immense French army, officered by faithful Republicans, is loyal to M. Freycinet, Minister of War, and to the Republic. To effect an overthrow of the Government with this stupendous military power in opposition would be hardly possible.

If France, without resort to revolution, can extricate herself from the present disgraceful muddle in which are involved legislators, ministers, journalists, society itself, it will be because Paris is not as inflammable as in the days of '89. The outrages of the Louis did not exceed in wrong to the people the barefaced swindles the exposition of which has incensed the French people to such a degree that they already confound the maladministration of government and the character of the government itself. The excitement of having a minister, four ex-ministers and five deputies formally charged with the worst possible form of political corruption might be of itself enough to foment evil passions in the hearts of the disturbance-loving Parisians; but when to this is added the popular outcry against the universal government, the cry of "all are guilty," it is easy to understand that there is a serious crisis impending in French affairs.



M. DE FREYCINET.

The excitement is increasing and the wildest reports are afloat of monarchist plots and coming arrests. It is asserted that Herz has been in communication in London with agents of the Count of Paris and that the exposure of the Thierre checks is directly attributable to royalist influence. Another rumor is that the officials and deputies, as well as civilians, connected with the Panama scandal have had it intimated to them that their salvation lies in an espousal of royalist schemes, and that all their offenses will be condoned if they will consent to betray the republic. Some confidence is placed by well-informed people in both these rumors, and it is apparent that royalist agents have assumed an activity they had not displayed for years, while there is also evidence that royalist money is again afloat.



GEORGE CLEMENCEAU.

The coming duel between M. Clemenceau, editor of Le Justice, and M. Deroulede, who was called a liar by the editor in the Chamber Thursday, is attracting great attention. Clemenceau has been granted the choice of weapons, and both men say they intend to fight a duel to the death.

Panama Canal Figures.

According to the statements issued by the liquidators, the amount expended by the Panama Canal Company reached the enormous total of $260,000,000. M. Achille Monchicourt, the last liquidator, placed under the following heads the sums expended:

Preparatory work and organization	$35,000,000
Concessions and general expenses	12,800,000
Advertisements, taxes, etc	17,600,000
Construction, material and transportation	33,200,000
Contractors	88,600,000
Purchase of Panama railroad	18,600,000
Paid to shareholders as interim interest and invested for payment of lottery bonds	54,200,000

According to this account not the whole of the $260,000,000 has been lost. One-fifth of this sum has been repaid to the subscribers in the shape of interest ad interim. Then there are assets represented by the fourth, fifth and sixth items. These cost a little over $140,000,000 and their present value is estimated at about $14,000,000. The other three items, amounting to a little over $65,000,000, are a total loss. Of the whole amount expended only a little over one-third was spent in the actual construction of the canal.

SHERMAN'S CANAL BILL.

Greater Security Given the United States than in the Original Bill.

The Nicaragua canal bill, which has held the attention of the Foreign Relations Committee since the beginning of the session, has at last been completed, and was favorably reported by its author, Senator Sherman. The new bill, according to a Washington correspondent, is drawn on substantially the same lines as the bill reported from the committee to the last Congress, including, as it does, a proposition to guarantee bonds of the company to the extent of $100,000,000 to aid in the construction of the canal. The new bill, however, contains some additions which increase the obligations of the company as well as the security of the Government. For instance, in the second section the real and personal property and franchises of the company are included in the liabilities. In the third section it is provided that all of the stock heretofore subscribed for or issued shall be called in and canceled; that all bonds issued shall be redeemed and canceled and that all outstanding obligations shall be satisfied before the act takes effect. The dates are changed so as to make the bonds issued Jan. 1, 1893, and to make them mature in 1953 instead of 1911, as is proposed in the original bill; and they are also made redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after 1913.

The section requiring the company to execute a mortgage to the United States as security for the guaranty is amended by the addition of a clause requiring the mortgage to contain a provision for a sinking fund for the payment of the bonds at maturity. In addition section 6 of the old bill provides that if the company default in the payment of interest or in other respects before the canal is put into operation the right of foreclosure shall at once attach in favor of the United States. In the last section an amendment is made so that ten instead of six of the fifteen directors shall be appointed by the President of the United States, not more than five of whom shall be appointed from one political party.

HOMESTEAD INDICTMENTS.

True Bills Found Against Participants in the Alleged Poison Plot.

True bills have been returned by the grand jury against District Master Workman Dempsey of the Knights of Labor, Robert Beatty, Patrick Gallagher, and J. M. Davidson on six counts of administering poison to non-union men at Homestead. The trials will be fixed for a date as early as possible.

When the cases were presented to the grand jury one of the Carnegie attorneys said the total number of deaths so far caused by the poison was thirty-two. They have heard from this number, but there are probably other deaths of which they have had no knowledge. The majority of the nonunionists were residents of other States. After taking sick, most of them were furnished tickets to their homes. A great many were lost sight of after this, and it is impossible to say whether the men died or recovered. Scores of men, the attorney said, were still sick. Some of them have the poison in their systems so thoroughly that they will never recover their full health. What the poison was the company is yet unable to say. Chemists are still at work on it.

The attorneys for the defendants say the Carnegie Company has made out a poor case, on account of being unable to say what kind of poison was used. An effort is being made to have Coroner McDowell exhume the remains of a number of workmen, who it was claimed died in the mill of typhoid fever.

REPUBLICAN SEAT CONTESTS.

Kansas Supreme Court Will Decide the Election of Five Legislators.

Judge W. C. Webb, attorney for the Populists, has commenced proceedings in the Supreme Court at Topeka, Kan., to contest the election of five Republicans to the Legislature. The proceedings are in the nature of a mandamus, asking the court to pass upon the technical and constitutional questions raised by the Populists, and demanding that a restraining order be issued prohibiting the Republican members from taking their seats upon certificates of election already issued by the returning board. Then they will ask to delay the hearing, it is said, until after the Legislature is organized, and on having obtained the organization of the House it will, of course, make no difference how the cases are decided.

Resubmission in South Dakota.

Pierre, S. D., special: A complete canvass of the members-elect of the Legislature by prominent resubmissionists is given as authority for the claim that they have enough votes to carry the resubmission of the prohibition clause of the constitution. They claim that of 126 members of both houses 115 have pledged themselves to vote for resubmission.

Newsy Paragraphs.

KEY WEST, Fla., will again be garrisoned.

IT is said that Bishop Spaulding will be Archbishop Kenrick's coadjutor.

DIES' furniture factory, Alexandria, Va., burned. Loss, $110,000; insurance, $35,000.

THE increase in the net earnings of the Union Pacific Road in October was $1,319,909.

IT is stated that the Illinois Central Road will soon control the Little Rock and Memphis Road.

HAWAII will be represented at the World's Fair by its famous band, $12,000 having been appropriated.

THE Newton National Bank, at Newton, Kas., has failed. It was closed in the same manner two years ago.

HARRY DUNCAN has been sentenced at St. Louis to hang on Feb. 3, next, for the murder of Policeman James Bowdy.

A STRANGER walked into Joseph Mandel's pawn shop at Louisville, Ky., pointed a pistol at the proprietor, picked up $1,500 worth of diamonds and escaped.

FRANK S. GRAY, who lost his suit against Col. Elliot F. Shepard, proprietor of the Mail and Express, for breach of contract, has decided to take his case to a higher court.

FRANK W. RŒHL, the young German who butchered Frank Paulsen with a hatchet last September in New York, and afterward plundered the apartment, has been found guilty of murder, and will be sentenced to death.

PETER HART, the old soldier who nailed the Union flag to the mast at Fort Sumter after it had been shot away, is dying at his home, 356 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, from the effects of a stroke of paralysis.

These are Facts
Housekeepers Should Seriously Consider.

If you want the best food, you will be interested in the following facts, which show why "Royal" is the best baking powder, why it makes the best and most wholesome food, and why its use has become almost universal—its sale greater in this country than the sale of all other cream of tartar baking powders combined.

The Royal Baking Powder NEVER fails.

It is absolutely pure and wholesome.

It is combined from the most approved and healthful ingredients.

It makes the finest flavored, most tender, delicious and wholesome food.

It has greater leavening strength than any other baking powder, and is therefore the cheapest.

It never loses its strength, but will keep fresh and of full leavening power until used.

It acts slowly in the dough, so that none of its strength is lost before the baking is completed.

It makes food that will keep sweet, moist and fresh longer, or that may be eaten hot and fresh with impunity.

The reasons why the Royal Baking Powder is superior to all others in these respects are easily stated. One is because it is made from chemically pure materials; another is because it is made with greater care and accuracy than any other. It is always uniform in composition and leavening power. It has been the standard baking powder since its introduction. The founder and conductor of its business ever since is still at the head of its management. Thus all the knowledge and skill attained by over a quarter of a century's experience is available in its present preparation. The consumer is not experimented upon by changes of formula that are constantly being made in other powders in an effort to get a mixture that will not "cake" or lose its strength, or that follow changes of proprietorship or manufacturers. The Royal Baking Powder is always certain and equal in its work; a teaspoonful does the same perfect work to-day that it did yesterday, or last week or month, or last year.

While the last teaspoonful in a can of Royal is as good as the first, other powders lose their strength after being made a short time, and particularly after the can is opened.

The exactness with which the active principle of each ingredient prior to mixing is ascertained by expert chemists; the actual prohibition enforced against the receipt into the works of an impure ingredient; the care with which the materials are dried, coated and prepared before their combination, and the precision in packing the powder so that it shall be delivered to the consumer in the perfect condition in which it leaves the factory, are some of the details which go to make the perfect "Royal."

The same means are not employed by other manufacturers. There have been a great many imitations of the Royal, but no equals. Pure materials are not employed, care is not taken in their preparation and combination, while in the great majority of baking powders alum is added to give them strength while cheapening their cost.

The great popularity and general use of the Royal Baking Powder attest its superiority.

His Humble Friends.

The relation of celebrated men to those whom they meet in the humbler walks of life is often as interesting as the estimation in which they are held by the great world. It is said that Tennyson was always kind and almost deferential to the old nurse who took care of him when he was a child.

To the country people who knew him he had always a most unpretending manner, and few of them appreciated him as a genius. They seemed to consider whatever he did to be quite the right thing because he did it, even though it might look peculiar.

They were accustomed to his solitary rambles, and though frequently surprised by the appearance of a figure in a short cloak and slouch hat in some dark bit of woodland, they were never slow in settling upon its right identity.

At one time a countryman who fancied he had seen an apparition of some sort, added, after attempting its description:

"If it wa'n't a ghost, then 'twere Mr. Tennyson!"

Startling.

The biographers of Mrs. James K. Polk record what they call a "pleasant speech" made to her while she was mistress of the White House.

In the course of an evening reception, when the rooms were filled with guests, there fell one of those sudden silences that now and then occur in the midst of the buzz of talk. Then a deep, distinct voice said, slowly:

"Madam, I have long wished to see the lady upon whom the Bible pronounces a woe!"

The remark was startling, and no one ventured to make a reply. Mrs. Polk looked at the speaker with a puzzled air, and he added:

"Does not the Bible say, 'Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you?'"

The company was relieved, and the lady bowed her thanks for the compliment.

Carlyle's Generosity.

A friend of Leigh Hunt tells this story in Good Words of a time when both Thomas Carlyle and Leigh Hunt were very poor, but not so poor but that there was an opportunity for each to show a generous spirit.

One day a gentleman visiting Carlyle noticed two golden sovereigns exposed in a little vase on the chimney-piece, and asked what they were for.

Carlyle looked—for him—embarrassed, and gave no definite answer.

"Well, now, my dear fellow," said the visitor, "neither you nor I are in quite the position to waste sovereigns; what are they for?"

"Well, the fact is," said Carlyle, "Leigh Hunt likes better to find them there than that I should give them to him."

A Popular Fallacy.

People commonly imagine that in speaking of dogs they are referring to a single species which has many varieties. But in reality the name is merely a conventional one, under which are grouped in popular parlance all of the domesticated canidæ. The North American cayote, is in fact much nearer to the greyhound, zoologically speaking, than the pug is. It is simply a wild dog. So is the wolf likewise. From just such wild types man's faithful four-footed friends are descended.

Mr. L. B. Hamlen,

Of Augusta, Me., says: "I do not remember when I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla; it was several years ago, and I find it does me a great deal of good in my declining years.

I am 91 Years

2 months and 26 days old, and my health is perfectly good. I have no aches or pains.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

regulates my bowels, stimulates my appetite, and helps me to sleep well. I doubt if a preparation ever was made so well suited to the wants of old people." L. B. HAMLEN, Elm Street, Augusta, Me., Sept. 26, 1891.

HOOD'S PILLS cure sick headache, biliousness, assist digestion, the best after-dinner pills.

Well Said.

Flattery, when delicately administered, cannot fail to be acceptable. "You forget that I am an old woman," said a lady, in response to an admiring remark from one of the old schools. "Madam," was the reply, "when my eyes are dazzled by a diamond it never occurs to me to ask a mineralogist for its history." Horace Walpole, in dining with the Duchess of Queensborough on her eightieth birthday, said, in proposing her health, "May you live, your grace, until you begin to grow ugly!" Her ladyship's tongue was as ready as his own. She replied, "I thank you, Mr. Walpole. May you long contine your taste for antiquities!"

Strange.

"Our guess-doll netted us over $4,000. No one guessed the name, and I still have the doll," said the Rev. Mr. Scaddleberry.

"It must have had an odd name. What was it?"

"I didn't name it at all," returned the reverend gentleman, with a face that simply beamed with pious regard for its owner's clever business sense.

A Sad Mistake.

An absent-minded Toronto woman in her hurry to start for church took from a closet a pair of her husband's trousers for her dolman, threw them over her arm, and did not discover her mistake until she had thrown them over the back of a pew in front of her.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. Also $1 for one dog, $2 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog The Road and Special Road Tax are included in first installment. The Poll and Dog Tax are divided equally between the two installments.

Taxes of 1892 are due the first day of January, 1893, and may be paid in full or in two installments The first installment must be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1893, the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1893 If the first installment is not paid when due both installments become delinquent. Ten per cent shall be added and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty and charges on delinquent taxes resulting from any omission of the person paying, to state definitely on what property, in whose name, and in what township or corporation it was assessed.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once, The law is of such a character that there is no option left to the Treasurer but to enforce the collection of the delinquent taxes, however much he may regret to collect the same by sale of property.

"The owner of the property on the first day of April each year shall be liable for the taxes of that year The purchaser of property on the first day of April shall be considered the owner on that day."

Examine your receipts before leaving the office and see that all your property is included.

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1893.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days. We have 6,000 receipts to make and all cannot be made in the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the 3rd Monday in April and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sendidg by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipts will be made out for any party until they are ready to pay.

Assignees, Guardians, Administrators and other who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as individual estates, etc, are earnestly requested to settle such taxes before the last few days, as it requires considerable time to make the divisions and seperate receipts therefor As the treasurer cannot know the location of each person's property, taxpayers should designate the property on which they wish to pay taxes, and see that all property is specified on their receipts. If they have land in more than one township or town, or desire to pay taxes on lands not in their name, call the treasurer's attention to the matter.

REUBEN SAWVEL, Treasurer.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Wm. Fisher and wife spent Christmas at Ft. Wayne.

A sister of Mrs. Suman's is visiting her at present. The writer has not learned her name.

Mrs. Finch came from Chicago Friday to spend Christmas with her sister, Mrs Winslow. She returned home Wednesday afternoon.

Rev. Suman preached two most excellent sermons Christmas day and evening The day was a severe one, the weather very cold, the wind sharp and cutting, and the snow coming in gusts. From present appearances no one need fear an open winter from this time on.

Mrs. Dell Locke returned Monday evening from Decatur, Ind., where she has spent several days with her husband, making arrangements in connection with the hotel he has taken They are both pleased with the place, the hotel and their prospects. The hotel is very spacious, and handsomely even elegantly furnished. Mr. Locke has gone to Cincinnati to purchase furniture for the office Decatur is said to have about 5,000 inhabitants.

Monday, about five o'clock, when the half past twelve train from the east was coming into town, behind time, a man was discovered on the track opposite Charles Kelley's residence, who seemed as if in the act crossing. The whistle was blown repeatedly, and the speed of the train lessened, yet while the man looked back at the train, he seemed to make no effort to escape the approaching danger, and was caught on the cow-catcher, thrown and killed The train stopped, and it was discovered to be Josiah Brysland, a respectable man of this place, whose son died in Ft Wayne last spring. The first report your correspondent heard was that his foot was caught, and he was unable to extricate himself. If that is a mistake, he was probably paralyzed with fright or fear, and simply stood still. He leaves a wife and one son.

ASHLEY.

The round house is nearly completed.

Ashley's first Christmas will never be forgotten.

Take your horses to John Wood. He is an expert shoer.

The new brick block at West Ashley is nearly completed.

Theodore Gary and family are gone for a few days on a holiday tour.

When you are in need of first class lumber go to Mr. Davis. He can suit you.

Through trains are expected to pass through here by the 15th of next month.

Harve, Shafer has just received another big lot of boots and shoes. Now boys don't go with cold feet.

Jim Clark goes to Detroit next Monday on business. His new buildihg is ready for counters and shelves.

It is rumored that there will be some weddings at West Ashley in the near future. Hank do you know when it will be?

Last Saturday was a lively day for our merchants and upon the streets, Ashley against the world for a six monthling.

Don't go and pay 7 and 8 per cent for money when you can arrange with F. Seiler to get it at 5½ per cent on long time.

Last Saturday the stockholders of the new elevator at West Ashley donated a days work in hauling gravel around their building.

Geo. Strayer had another visitation of mysterious beings assuring him that all his prophecies and sayings about Ashley are bound to prove true.

The Christmas tree at the south church was a grand success Rev. Mr. Albright knows how to please and to conduct a Christmas exercise.

CONCORD.

Clara George is slowly improving.

Ollie Morr was in Auburn Saturday.

In all the doings on program, no weddings.

Martin White's of Butler spent Sunday here.

Mrs. Wm. Wise is in Ohio visiting relatives.

The B. & O. pay car passed over the road Friday.

Bertha Hennessey returned from Ft. Wayne Friday.

Obituary.

Died, Monday, Dec 26, 1892, at his home three miles east and one mile north of Butler, Ind. Dr. James Milligan in the 77th year of his age. Dr. Milligan was born in Washington county, Pa., May 31st, 1816, where he grew to manhood receiving a liberal education in the schools of his day and as the circumstances of his fathers' farm permitted, he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. James Scroggs, and attended the Cleveland Medical college in 1843 and 1844. In 1845 he removed to Tuscarawas county, Ohio and practiced medicine there until 1853 when he removed to Butler, Ind., continuing his practice until age and infirmity forced him to turn his practice away. Oct. 17, 1848 he was united in marriage to Margaret Browning, of Jefferson county, Ohio. To this union were born five children all preceding him in death. He resided in Butler until 1865 when he removed to his farm where he resided until his death. Dr. Milligan was a man of unusual kindness of disposition, a man of unflinching integrity, an easy debtor, yet among the very few physicians in this country who have enjoyed prosperity to the end of their days. He kept inviolate every obligation and left an untarnished name behind them. We believe he was not a member of any church yet the cries of the deserving poor were not left unheard He leaves his aged wife to battle out life's near end but no other relative. We believe he had never traveled on a rail train. He will long be remembered by all who knew him as a kind friend and a careful and skillful physician. The funeral was on Wednesday, Dec. 28

Course in Live Stock Husbandry

Beginning January 10th, 1893, a special course of instruction in live stock husbandry and dairying, continuing eight weeks will be given at Purdue University, LaFayette, Ind.

The University charges for attending this school are five dollars for tuition and ten dollars for laboratory fees and materials.

Each county agricultural society has authority to appoint two persons to a scholarship which will give each of them free tuition and exempt them from the above named fees. Those not having these scholarships will have to pay the tuition and fees referred to.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.
Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon gained twenty pounds. All this occurred after learned and well known physicians had failed. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

Mothers and Daughter.

Over twelve years ago I was afflicted with a very serious female difficulty, and for the last sixteen months was under treatment of three of the very best physicians that money could employ. Under their skillful treatment I gradually grew worse until they decided they could render me no permanent help. One of my friends persuaded me to try a bottle of Dullam's Great German Female Uterine Tonic and after taking three bottles, can say I am in better health than I have been for twenty years and am now sixty years old, but feel as young as at thirty.—$1 a bottle.

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. PERFECTION IN TRAVELING

At 6 30 p. m. daily one of the handsomest trains in the United States and known as the North-Western Limited, leaves the passenger station of the North-Western Line in Chicago, on its journey to St. Paul and Minneapolis, the twin cities of the North-West. Vestibuled throughout, and equipped with buffet, smoking and library cars, private compartment sleeping cars, drawing room sleepers and superb dining cars, it furnishes its occupants with every comfort and convenience which could be desired by the most fastidious.

While in its entirety it undoubtedly takes rank with the finest trains in the world, there are two features of its equipment that deserve especial mention for they are new departures in the western railway world:

The buffet, smoking and library car is furnished in the most luxurious manner, with comfortable arm chairs, writing desks, book-cases and a well stocked buffet, from which light refreshments are served. The private compartment sleeping car is designed especially for the accommodation of family parties and ladies traveling without escort. It is composed of ten separate compartments, each complete in itself, and containing washstand, hot and cold running water and all necessary toilet arrangements.

Aside from these two features, it is in keeping with the rest of the service to say that the supper served in the dining car, after the train leaves Chicago, is a meal calculated to please the epicure.

In a word, if you desire to travel in the most comfortable manner and make the trip to St. Paul, Minneapolis, or any point in the Northwest, in the quickest time, be sure that your ticket reads via the North-Western line. Maps, time tables and full information can be obtained upon application to any ticket agent, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago.

Desired Information

We desire to impress upon the minds of the public the superiority of the service offered by the Wisconsin Central Lines between Chicago and Milwaukee and St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and all points in the Northwest. Two fast trains leave Chicago daily for St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth with Pullman Vestibuled drawing room sleepers and coaches of latest design. Its dining car service is unsurpassed. This the Public is invited to judge for itself. It is the only route to the Pacific coast over which both Pullman vestibuled, first-class, and Pullman tourist cars are operated from Chicago via St. Paul without change.

Pamphlets giving valuable information can be obtained free upon application to your nearest ticket agent, or to Jas. C. Pond, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

How Nature Cures

By EMMET DENSMORE, M. D. Published by SWAN SONNENSCHIEN & CO., Paternoster Row, London;

a work of 415 pages, clear type, fine paper, well bound in cloth; price, $2.00.

"How Nature Cures" scientifically demonstrates that bread, cereals, and all starch foods are unnatural and unwholesome. Scientists and laymen alike will find it worth their while critically to examine this evidence.

Dr. Densmore, although a graduate of one of the oldest of old school medical colleges, is resolutely opposed to drastic drugs and mineral medicines; and enthusiastically in favor of overcoming disease by diet and obedience to hygienic laws. The Saturday Review (London, Sept. 20, 1890) editorially states: "Dr. Densmore is one of the most open minded men we have ever met in print." Dr. Densmore is well known in England as the founder of the Natural Food Society, and of its organ, the NATURAL FOOD magazine; and he has brought consternation into the ranks of the vegetarians by the new lights he has brought to bear upon their favorite foods.

A pamphlet of 64 pages, with paper cover, containing preface, table of contents, and some of the more important chapters in the book, is published simultaneously at 25c., and is an invaluable hand-book. Either of these may be purchased at news-stands, or ordered through any book-seller, or will be sent post free on receipt of price.

TO AGENTS: Canvassers find both the 25c. and the $2.00 editions ready sale, and unusual inducements are offered to agents. We will mail particulars to any address upon request, and any subscriber to this paper who will mail us this notice will be permitted to buy a single book at the lowest price to agents.

JOHN G. CARLISLE'S.

Great Speech on the Tariff.

A Tax on Poor People's Clothes.

As I have already said, the articles selected by the committee were, with a few insignificant exceptions, the products of our own country, and the sums which I have given to the senate as representing the increase in prices and in the cost of living are based upon them and not upon any rise which may have taken place in the prices of imported articles on account of the very large increases in the rates of duty contained in the tariff act of 1890. Why, Mr. President, the increased price of the $19,591,650 worth of woolen goods which were imported into this country between Oct. 1, 1890, the date of the passage of the McKinley bill, and the 30th day of June, 1891, the end of that fiscal year, amounted to many millions of dollars.

The report of imports and consumption for the fiscal year 1891, furnished to us by the treasury department, embraces and mingles together all the importations which were made during that year, for the purpose of showing the ad valorem rate of tax, whether they were made before or after Oct. 1, 1890, and therefore reduces the average ad valorem rate of taxation to a much lower figure than it actually was under the McKinley act. At the expense of a great deal of time and labor I have selected from this report those articles of woolen manufacture which were imported after Oct. 1, 1890, and which therefore paid the increased rates of duty imposed by the McKinley tariff act, and I find the result to be that the total importations of woolen manufactures, including yarns, which cost us abroad $19,591,650, paid an ad valorem rate of 92.84 per cent. The amount of duty paid on these goods was $18,192,238, so that it cost, without including anything for insurance, commissions, freight or interest or any other charge, $37,785,080 to lay down in New York goods which cost abroad $19,591,650.

[An elaborate table was here presented, showing the imports of woolen goods from Oct. 1, 1890, to June 30, 1891.]

Let us take for illustration a quality of dress goods in most common use among the people. The total value abroad of that class of goods imported after the passage of the McKinley act was $5,280,841, the tax on them was $5,423,422, the ad valorem rate of taxation upon this $5,280,841 worth of goods purchased and consumed by our people was 102.70 per cent. The cost of these goods abroad was 22.8 cents per square yard, the tax was 23.42 per square yard, and, adding the tax, it made the total cost to lay them down in New York, without any charge for commissions, freight or insurance, 45.70 per yard, so that the goods which cost abroad $5,280,841 cost the importer at New York, without any of the other usual charges, $10,704,264.

But we are told by the author of the McKinley act that we ought not to be disturbed about this, because the foreigner pays the tax. If so, here is the most remarkable instance of disinterested benevolence ever witnessed in a commercial transaction between people of different countries, for the foreigner actually gave to the people of the United States between Oct. 1, 1890, and June 30, 1891, $5,280,841 worth of these goods and paid them more than $142,000 in money to induce them to take them.

The goods of which I am now speaking constitute the class most largely imported and sold to the masses of the people of the United States, not to rich people, but to poor people and people in moderate circumstances, as senators will see when I give the description of the goods.

I think that anybody who examines this table, which makes a correct exhibit of the importations of these goods after the passage of the McKinley act, and the rates of taxation upon them, will scarcely ever contend hereafter that the foreign producer pays the duty—he will go back to the old "delusion" with which my friend from Iowa (Mr. Allison) says he was afflicted in 1870, that the American consumer pays at least a part of it.

Mr. Allison—I have not gotten over that yet.

Mr. Carlisle—The senator says he has not recovered yet. But the senator may believe now that the foreign producer pays some part of the tax upon articles imported into this country. If he does, he has, either by mistake or otherwise, assisted in making a gross misappropriation of the public money in the McKinley act, for which he voted. That act provides that when raw materials subject to duty are imported into the United States and converted here into manufactured articles which are exported for sale abroad to the citizens of other countries, the domestic manufacturer, producer or exporter shall have a drawback equal to the amount of duty paid less 1 per cent. If the foreigner pays that duty, why in the name of common sense and common honesty do we pass a law to pay it back to the Standard Oil company, or to somebody else who exports oils, meats or cans made from imported tin plate? An honest legislator who believes the foreigner pays the tax would insist upon giving it back to the foreigner who sold us the tin plate out of which the cans were manufactured, and not to the corporations and others who convert that material into cans and then export them and their contents to be sold abroad to the people of other countries at lower prices than they can be sold to their own fellow citizens. I therefore feel justified in saying that no gentleman who supported the McKinley act in congress, nor Mr. McKinley himself, although he goes about the country proclaiming that the foreigner pays the duty, really believes a word of it. But I tender an apology to the senate for attempting to discuss such an absurd proposition.

Now, Mr. President, while speaking of tin plate I ought to refer to a statement made by the senator from Rhode Island, that the people of the United States paid to the Welsh manufacturers of that article in the year 1891 seventy-six cents per box more than the profits which they were realizing before that time. This is undoubtedly too true. It is certainly true that the McKinley act was a great blessing to the Welsh manufacturers of tin plate, and enabled them to take from the people of the United States, as I shall proceed to show, many millions of dollars over and above the profits which they were making before its passage.

[The senator here presented tables showing the cost of producing tin plate in Wales and the advance in price there in anticipation of the McKinley bill, and continued]:

It appears therefore that the people of the United States, before the increased rate of duty on tin plate took effect under the McKinley act, paid, not to the importers, not to the government, not to the dealers here, but directly into the pockets of the Welsh tin plate manufacturers, the sum of $4,629,750 as a surplus profit on their sales, which was considerably more than half the value of their plant manufacture of that article.

An Injustice of the Tariff.

Mr. President, it is a broad statement to make, but the McKinley act increased the duty on every fabric that contains a single thread or fiber of wool, and in most cases the increase was very large. If an article of silk is found to contain a thread of wool for ornamentation or for any other purpose, it becomes subject to the woolen goods duty, which, even in the case of the cheapest woolen fabrics used by the poor, is much higher than the duty on the finest silk fabrics used by the rich.

I have here a number of samples of woolen and worsted goods imported under the McKinley act, with statements showing their cost abroad in 1889 and 1890, their cost abroad now, the duty imposed upon them in 1889 and 1890, the duty imposed upon them now, and the increased cost to lay them down at New York to the consumer.

[Elaborate tables were presented.]

The prices abroad have fallen necessarily because the cost of the raw material, wool and cotton, has gone down in the market; but the people of the United States, by the passage of the tariff act and the imposition of a higher rate of duty upon these goods have been wholly deprived of the benefits which they should have received, and ought to have received on account of the decreased cost of the materials entering into the manufacture of the articles they consume. The cotton grower and the wool [illegible] prices for their products and to pay higher prices for the goods manufactured from them.

The Protected Manufacturer.

The necessary effect of the McKinley act is to enable the manufacturers of these articles at home to keep up the prices to a certain figure, no matter what may be the diminution in the cost of their raw material or in the wages of their laborers, because the high duty protects them against competition abroad so long as they keep their prices just below the point which would enable the importer to bring them in and realize a profit after paying the duty. What that point is the domestic manufacturer always knows very well, because he keeps himself informed in relation to the foreign prices of the articles he produces, and he therefore permits importations in two cases only: First, when he cannot produce the particular quality of goods at all, and secondly, when he cannot produce them in sufficient quantities to supply the home demand.

LIVURA M'F'G. Co.,

GENTLEMEN:—"My little girl had Blood Poison; her system was all run down, her body was completely covered with a rash and horrid red blotches, owing to the intense itching she could not sleep. Her digestive organs were in a very bad condition; she complained of pain in the limbs and we were very much alarmed about her. We tried everything we could think of but nothing had the desired effect until we found PITCHER'S LIVURA. She had not been taking LIVURA more than one week when her eyes looked natural again, her appetite improved, and before the second bottle had been used, the rash and blotches disappeared, the itching left, and she is now PERFECTLY WELL and has gained flesh. All due to

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1867—Continued.

On Sunday morning Feb. 17, the sensational rumor spread through Auburn and out into the country that the treasury had been robbed during the night. The report proved true; the safe had been burglarized without discovery and the sum abstracted was reported at nearly $19,000.

The outer door being of iron had been drilled into and pried off, and the wooden door had been easily forced open. The outer door of the safe had been expertly cut through the panels above and below the lock, the inner bolt withdrawn and the door thrown open. The inner money chest had been forced by steel wedges and bars in a manner that indicated an expert craftsman.

An eager anxious throng soon filled the office looking with astonishment at the result of the marvelous power of the tools and the rare skill of the burglars. All about the floor lay scattered orders and papers, but everything of money kind had vanished leaving behind no clue.

It was never ascertained who took the money, nor how much had been taken, and although a reward of $5,000 was offered for the arrest of the burglars, and some money paid for ineffectual detective work, the perpetrators of the robbery escaped with their booty.

The treasurer fell under the ban of suspicion and at the instance of a patent safe company was arrested, promptly gave bail for his appearance when wanted and the case was heard before George Wolf, justice of the peace, in a grove at Waterloo. The public attended and great interest was excited in the trial.

Distinguished attorneys had been engaged by both parties. A. Allen and Judge Worden for the prosecution; Jas. I. Best, James B. Morrison and A. M. Pratt for the defense. Evidence of so-called detectives was given, the safe was examined, and the verdict was a vindication of the official. Then followed a suit against the bondsmen, changes of venue, heavy lawyers' fees and a final judgment which was never enforced, and in the end the county, as has invairiably happened, had again been robbed, but the second time by the costly course of legal proceedings.

The pillage of the county treasury proved disastrous, not only to the financial interests of county, towns and townships in increase of existing debt and loss of funds with which to carry on the schools, but to the political supremacy in DeKalb, of the republican party to which popular sentiment justly or unjustly ascribed responsibility for the theft of public funds.

The credit of the county, low enough previously, sank yet lower. Warrants on the treasury ran two and a half years before called for redemption and were reluctantly taken at a 10 per cent discount, while in some townships special school orders were depreciated lower still. As an instance of that time, Wilmington township with eleven small dilapidated framed school houses, had outstanding orders on the special school fund that could not be sold for 90 cts on the $1, and which ran four years before they could be paid.

In happy contrast to those dark days, stands the credit of the county, its warrants worth their face and Wilmington township is proud of her fine brick buildings on ample grounds geographically located, her funds on hand and her low tax levies.

Division of taxes into two installments payable spring and fall, and convenience of a half dozen banks wherein temporarily accruing funds can be safely distributed, have withdrawn temptation from the treasurer's safe and the costly experience of '67 will last this county many years to come.

Although disaster had fallen upon the finances of the county and depression and discouragement were experienced by the business interests of the town of Auburn whose outlook was far from favorable, matters of church and school, especially the latter were looking up and attracting unusual attention.

Previous annals had given something of the part history of officers and pastors of the Presbyterian church of Auburn and now, when early in 1867, a regular pulpit supply had been found in the person of Rev. Charles Evans, it seems proper to attempt a connected history of this prosperous and enterprising denomination down to the present.

After the resignation of Rev. Charle A. Munn, there had been a time when the church was occupied by casual preachers only. Rev. C. Evans had been in charge but a year when he was succeeded by Rev. Levi C. Littell, who had his home in Waterloo and filled a pulpit in each town until the spring of '71, when the services of Rev. J. B. Fowler, resident and preacher at Waterloo, were procured for the Auburn church, following the same course of dividing the time equally during a period of two years, when the increased prosperity of Auburn and accessions to her population consequent to the building of railroads, stimulated and encouraged the society to independent action.

The services of Rev. J. E. Fisher were secured for two years. His sermons were impressive and eloquent; he gave his entire time and thought to furthering the growth of the church and the congregation steadily increased under his ministration. During his pastorate, the society purchased for $400, of Guy Plumb, the lot on which it was purposed to erect a substantial church building as soon as practicable. A new organ was bought and in April, '74, E. D. Hartman and S B. Miller were added to the session by selection as elders.

In '75, the church engaged Rev. Henry Johnston, who had just graduated at the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Chicago, Ill. They found him a ready and able speaker, of affable manners and generous impulses and he speedily met with gratifying favor and success. The following winter, he held a series of meetings, which were characterized by a deep spiritual interest and awakening that concluded with many accessions, among whom were and unusual proportion of heads of families. In October, the congregation directed the trustees to sell the old frame church and the ground on which it stands, to the Evangelical Lutheran church for $650. The sale was effected with the reserve of the right of occupancy for one year.

In the spring of '76 a subscription was circulated to raise means to build a new church, and Messrs Gibbs & Moser, architects of Toledo, Ohio, were employed to prepare plans and specifications for the edifice. The contract was let by Messrs. Joseph Albright, E. D. Hartman and S. B. Miller, trustees, to the firm of Bumpus & Hollinger. The building committee were E. E. Williams, R. Elson and Dr. W. S. Allen. Work was soon begun and the structure was substantially completed within the year at a cost of about $6,000. The masonry was laid under direction of A. Wheaton, and the brickwork by George Picker.

At that date, the church was the finest, costliest and most complete in all its appointments of any in the county. The style of architecture is a modified Gothic, The accoustic properties and the ventilation are excellent. Heating is by furnace of approved pattern and gas is used for lighting. The audience room has a seating capacity of 500. Desk and chairs were provided instead of the cumbersome pulpit of older styled churches.

What grand results from this one item of tax upon wealth might have been achieved if the law had not been repealed! Yet it constitutes less than one-third of the amount of which wealth was relieved at that time. What comforts and security the expenditure of such vast sum of money would confer upon the whole people, and the expenditure of that sum would furnish employment for the millions of men who are anxiously seeking work. But alas! by that vicious legislation it is left in the hands of those who have but little sympathy with struggling humanity.

Mr. Chairman, a reason now exists for imposing an income tax that did not exist at the opening of the Fifty-first congress. By reason of the wise and economical administration of the government by the democratic party for the four years immediately preceding that time we were confronted with a surplus of $100,000,000 in the treasury.

Now, by the extravagant legislation of the republican "billion dollar congress," a deficit is staring us in the face. The appalling fact appears that our revenues are not sufficient to meet the expenditures of the government; and this occurs, too, in a year, our crops exceeding in amount and quality any other period of our existence, giving us millions of bushels surplus to be sold to foreign countries to meet the deficit there caused by the failure of their crops. Yet, under these circumstances, we are startled by the intelligence that we can not make both ends meet. We can hardly pick up a newspaper but are startled with rumors of war with some foreign country, shocking our nervous system on account of our defenseless condition. We realize our inability to defend our coasts, our great cities, or our honor against any of the ordinary powers

England is prepared and ready to enforce her policy and demands at all times, and with her navy there is not a port on the Atlantic and Pacific nor a lake city from Duluth to Kingston that might not be brought under the muzzles of her guns within a month after a declaration of war, and our commerce, what we have left, would be at her mercy.

I know that Yankee courage and Yankee ingenuity is unsurpassed, yet it requires time for preparation and concentration to meet such emergencies. In the advanced stage of modern warfare results follow the attack quickly and the work of devastation is accomplished in a remarkably short period of time. In the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 Sadowa was captured within seventeen days after the firing of the first gun. Confidence in our wonderful resources; courage and ingenuity should not be permitted to discourage prompt and efficient preparation to avoid disaster and humiliation.

As compared with other natians our navy is a mere speck upon the waters. Gne of the most economical and effective means of defense is torpedo boats. Of such boats in 1891 France had 215, England 199, Germany 180, Italy 165, Russia 152 and the United States 2.

The expenditure of a few hundred million dollars for defense would make us feel secure and might prevent war, and the other powers, who would then be upon an equality with us, would be more ready to do justice or submit their differences to arbitration. To meet these possibile contingencies would it not be wise to commence at once to provide revenue, and commence at once, before it is too late, to prepare for the protection and future welfare of our becountry?

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

A Locomotive Explodes Killing Two Men and Scalding Others—Congressmen to Visit the Hawaiian Island—A $200,000 Fire at Fort Wayne—The Electoral Vote.

An Engine Explodes.

Monon (Ind.) special: The engine of the train going north from Monon to Michigan City, blew up near Francesville, Ind., killing two men and perhaps fatally scalding the third. The fireman, A. T. McCarthy of Indianapolis, was blown into the air and dropped dead on the track. The head brakeman, H. Buck, had bones broken all over his body and was terribly scalded and died in an hour. Con Cavannugh, engineer, was terribly scalded but may live. A farmer unloading hay about one hundred yards from where the engine burst had his wagon torn to pieces and himself was badly hurt by a piece of casting from the engine.

Crude Oil a Substitute for Natural Gas.

Findlay (Ohio) special: It has been settled that the natural gas supply of this great gas belt is no longer equal to the demand. The pressure is so low that it is useless for heating purposes in houses even. But what appears to be a calamity may prove to be a blessing, as several of the largest factories here are experimenting with crude oil for fuel, and have found it nearly as cheap as natural gas, safer and more easily controlled and always of uniform pressure. Thousands of industries here and at Lima, Fostoria, Bowling Green, Perrysburg and Toledo are preparing to use crude oil, a move that will be regarded with interest in manufacturing circles the country over.

Congressmen to Visit the Hawaiian Islands.

Washington special: An extended trip is in contemplation by members of the House and Senate, or at least a part of them. The scheme is a visit to the Hawaiian Islands, to be taken by fifteen Republicans and fifteen Democrats of the House and seven Republicans and seven Democrats of the Senate who are members of the present and will be members of the next Congress. One of the chief reasons for the proposed trip is said to be a desire on the part of the United States Government to counteract the influence which Englishmen are exerting in the islands to prevent and keep down American commerce.

Gives It Up.

Washington special: Chairman Carter, of the Republican National Committee, concedes the control of the Senate to the Democrats after March 4. In an interview with a reporter, he is quoted as not only giving up the contest in Wyoming and California, but also in his own State of Montana, where he was supposed to have a personal interest in the outcome of the struggle. He said, however, that he never had any intention of becoming a candidate for the Senate and he had refused his friends permission to use his name in the caucus.

Robbing John Chinaman.

Chinese Inspector Wicker reports to the Treasury Department that opposition to the Chinese exclusion act is being fomented with a view of getting money out of the Chinese. He cites that a recent case in New Orleans where, a Chinaman representing himself as the agent of the Chinese Six Companies, succeeded in collecting $200 from Chinamen under the pretext that it would be used to employ counsel to contest the law.

The Ohio Law Makers.

A special from Columbus, Ohio, dated the 3d inst., says: Both branches of the General Assembly convened at 4 o'clock this afternoon with few absentees and no vacancies caused by death. The only business transacted of any importance, after resolutions of courtesy had been extended by both houses, was the reading of Gov. McKinley's first annual message. To-morrow both houses will canvass the vote of last November.

The Electoral Vote.

The New York Evening Post says: The settlement of the Oregon contest makes it possible to give an accurate table of the vote for President as it should be cast by the electoral college, and which will show: Total number of votes, 444; necessary for a choice, 223; Cleveland's majority, 108.

The total vote for the respective candidates is as follows: Cleveland, 276; Harrison, 144, and Weaver, 24.

Umbria's Brave Officers.

A proposal is being discussed by the underwriters of Liverpool and London to present Captain McKay, Engineer Tomlinson and the other officers of the Umbria with a handsome sum of money in recognition of their services in having taken the Umbria into port successfully after the accident to the shaft. The underwriters will await similar action, which is expected on the part of the Cunard Steamship Company.

A Dangerous Sleigh Ride.

A "bob" containing a sleighing party of twenty-five was run into by a freight train on the Grand Trunk railroad near Detroit, and wrecked. Five of the party were injured, one of them, Henry Stomel, seriously.

A $200,000 Fire at Fort Wayne.

The Electric Light Works at Fort Wayne, Ind., was damaged by fire to the amount of $200,000. Geo. W. Klingman, a fireman, fell from a ladder and sustained injuries which may prove fatal.

WHITE CAPS

Administer a Terrible Beating to a Wife Whipper Near Kokomo, Ind.

Kokomo (Ind.) special: The White Caps are again at work in this part of the State. The other night a band of sixteen horsemen, with pillow cases drawn over their heads, rode to the residence of Thomas McCarthy, sixteen miles southwest of this city, took him from his bed and administered a terrible beating with hickory switches. He was left at a distance from the house in his underclothes, standing in the snow with bare feet. The night was intensely cold and McCarthy suffered severely from his punishment. He was charged with wife whipping and had several times been warned by the caps.

Some time ago a 16-year-old boy in the same vicinity, charged with being too attentive to a young widow, was severely handled by these masked night riders, supposed to be the same gang. Half a dozen others have received warnings.

A TERRIFIC EXPLOSION.

At a Crawfordsville Hotel Wrecks the Office and Injures Two Men.

Crawfordsville (Ind.) special: A terrific explosion occurred in the office of the Robbins Hotel, which shook the hotel frightfully, demolished the rooms, seriously injured two persons and stunned several others. It occurred in a most peculiar manner. Some days ago an employe found what appeared to be a gaspipe turned to a couple of points, and the same has since been utilized as an ice-pick and stove poker. Fred Mills, the night clerk, was using it in the latter capacity, when the explosion occurred, and, while investigating the cause, thinking that it was from a dynamite cartridge, placed there with evil intent, the police happened upon the shattered stump of the poker, and were struck by its bomb-like appearance.

Further investigation followed, and the poker proved to be a whaling bomb, one of several that were purchased as relics at New Bedford, Mass., last summer by Crawfordsville tourists. They are filled with most powerful explosives, and are intended to be exploded from a fuse, but it is believed that Mills allowed it to get red hot, thereby causing the explosion. Mills' proximity to the stove saved him from instant death, but he received most serious injuries, which may yet prove fatal. Bob Thomas, a colored porter, was struck on the head by a flying fragment, and badly injured. By a miracle they were the only people present at the time, though several traveling men had just stepped out. The large stove was blown into a thousand fragments, and the room had the appearance of having interviewed a Kansas cyclone, with large pieces of the stove sticking in the plastering and floors. The hotel was begrimed with soot, and every window in the room was shattered. A fire brigade extinguished the flames, thereby preventing a serious conflagration.

A REIGN OF BLOODSHED

Will Soon be Inaugurated in Spain by Anarchists.

Madrid Special: Fifteen hundred anarchists held a reunion in Barcelona to celebrate the New Year. There was much incendiary talk, and several of the speakers predicted a reign of bloodshed and terror in Spain during the year just opened. The leading anarchist, one Molas, declared that he meant to inaugurate 1893 with a baptism of blood. Great shouts of approval and torrents of denunciation of the grandees and middle classes followed this declaration.

A female anarchist named Theresa Claremunt sprang to the platform. She is as fierce an enemy to the established order of things as Louise Michel, and a good deal handsomer. "Go home," she cried, with dashing eyes and tossing hair. "Go home for the present and save the centimes your oppressors allow you to earn, while they revel in wealth. Save the wretched pittance to buy rifles, and prepare to execute on the blood sucking capitalists and their miserable tools the destruction provided for them in the anarchist program." Howls and shouts of applause broke in upon the words of the speaker. "Give them no quarter," she cried, "no quarter. I will lead to the points of the bayonets." The whole audience seemed frenzied by the woman's utterances and there might have been a dangerous demonstration but for the interference of some cooler heads, who succeeded in calming the excited gathering.

A CRUEL ACT.

An Atrocious Crime Committed at Durand, Mich.

An atrocious crime was committed at the house of Layton Beach, a farmer, living one mile east of Durand, Mich. About two weeks ago Leech employed a tramp named McGuire to do chores. McGuire, on pretext of securing rabbits, prevailed upon Leech to accompany him to the woods. After going a short distance McGuire struck Leech on the back of the head with an ax felling him to the ground. After striking Leech several more blows, McGuire dragged his victim to the barn, returned to the house, secured a gun and shot Mrs. Leech through the back portion of the neck. After assaulting her the fiend departed, leaving the woman in an unconscious condition. Mrs. Leech did not regain consciousness for twenty-four hours, when she aroused the neighborhood. Great excitement prevails, and, if caught, McGuire will probably be lynched. Mr. Leech is still unconscious, and there is little hope of his recovery. Robbery was the incentive of the crime, but McGuire secured only $50.

CALLED A HALT.

President Harrison Creates a Sensation on Wall Street.

The New York Times states that Secretary of the Treasury Foster's trip to New York was not on private business, as was given out officially, but was for the purpose of consulting Wall Street managers on the proposition to relieve the money market and check the export of gold by having the Government issue from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 of bonds. The Wall Street men were in favor of the scheme and the speculative contingent were in high feather. The President's co-operation has been counted on as sure, but this confidence was suddenly discovered to be delusive. The President not only refused to approve the deal, but he went further and expressed himself with usual force in a telegram to Foster, and declared that he could see no excuse for issuing bonds and, what was more, he did not propose that any should be issued while he was President.

Natural Gas Explosion.

Lancaster (Ohio) special: A natural gas explosion, which miraculously missed fatal results, occurred in the rear of H. A. Martens & Sons' hardware store. Frost had broken a small gauge pipe from the high pressure line, and the gas found its way under the frozen crust to the vaults and cellars in the vicinity. Paul Beery of the hardware store, upon going into the water-closet lit a match and was thrown bodily a dozen feet by the explosion which followed, losing his hair and beard. A conflagration was avoided by the efforts of the crowd attracted by the noise of the explosion.

Fire at Kouts, Ind.

Kouts, a small town near Valparaiso, Ind., was visited with a disasterous blaze recently. The fire started in the grocery store belonging to Mrs. Williamson, which was entirely consumed together with contents; no insurance. The next to go was the general dry goods store of B. Kouts, which was a total loss. The restaurant of Mrs. Williams adjoining was entirely consumed, and the postoffice was damaged. The exact loss is not estimated, but will reach into the thousands. The town has no water supply.

Desperate Dervishes.

Cairo special: The dervishes in South[illegible] showed activity. The other day a large party of them attacked the village of Gemal, near Wady Halfa, but were repulsed after a fierce fight in which several of them were killed. Before they could be driven off, however, they had cut a number of telegraph wires and done other mischief. Next day a second attack was made on Gemal, but the raiders were again driven off after a number of them had been killed. The second attack on the village was made by a different band from that driven off.

In Close Pursuit of the Mexican Bandits.

San Antonio special: United States Marshal Paul Frick received a telegram from Deputy Marshal Eugene Yglesias, of Webb County, stating that he had just received advices by wire from Guerrero, Mexico, that Second Lieut. C. A. Hedekin, with Troop G., Third cavalry, and Deputy United States Marshal Pink Hall and his posse were in close pursuit of a detachment of Mexican bandits in Zapata County, Texas. It is believed they will be overtaken within twenty-four hours, and, as the bandits are desperate, it is thought they will not surrender without making a strong resistance.

Don't Believe It Is Tascott, the Murderer.

Chicago special: The police do not believe the story coming from the northwest about William Tascott, the supposed murderer of Millionaire Snell. The pursuit of young Tascott has never been abandoned and Inspector Ross, who has charge of the case, made public some of the evidence in his possession on which he bases his belief that Tascott is the murderer. In the offices of custodian of police property is a small russet leather handbag and a plain gold ring with a ruby setting and a pile of shirts marked "W. H. T." The goods were received in a St. Paul pawn shop a few months after the murder.

Reunited After Many Years Separation.

Laporte (Ind.) special: After a separation of thirty-six years, Dr. Robert Rhea and wife were united here the other day. In 1856 Dr. Rhea went to New Orleans on business that finally took him to the West Indies. In the meantime Mrs. Rhea heard that her husband was dead and removed to this city. Rhea lost track of his wife and only returned to this State a few years ago, settling near Anderson. Recently, while talking to a drummer at that place, he learned that his wife was alive and hastened to meet her.

Burned to Death.

The house of William Phillips, a colored laborer, living near Stonybrook, L. I., was destroyed by fire. Four small children who were locked in the house, were horribly burned. Two of them were dead when discovered. The others died next morning. It is supposed that the children while playing with fire in the kitchen stove set the house ablaze. The building was a one-story-and-half frame structure. The neighbors saw the flames and heard the children's agonizing cries, but were unable to reach them or extinguish the fire.

Plot to Burn a City.

Buenos Ayres special: A plot to burn up this city was discovered a few days ago, and a number of policemen and firemen have been arrested on the charge of being connected with the conspiracy. The plan of the conspirators was to set fire to the city in several different places at once. They had selected as places at which to apply the torch some of the principal buildings of the city, including the custom house, the police office, and the archbishop's palace. The object of the conspiracy was plunder.

The Homestead Prisoners.

Pittsburgh special: There are still fifteen persons in jail for alleged crimes growing out of the Homestead troubles. Among them are O'Donnell, Critchlow, and Clifford, charged with murder, treason, and riot; Beatty and Gallagher, charged with poisoning, and nine colored non-union men, charged with riot, and James Akers, charged with riot. Twenty-five men were placed in jail charged with riot and sixteen bailed out, eight for murder and five bailed out, sixteen for treason and ten bailed out.

Sensational Verdict.

The Coroner's jury investigating the Chicago casualty, in which four persons were killed and a number injured, caused by a Fort Wayne engine crashing into a street car, has returned a verdict. It recommends that the engineer of the construction, the conductor of the street car, and the flagman and gateman at the crossing be held to await the action of the grand jury. It also holds the street railroad company and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad co-responsible.

Killed by Dynamite.

Adrain Fairchild, aged 55 years, of 479 Hudson street, New York, a driver employed by the dock department, while passing pier No. 14 was instantly killed by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge.

Killed by a Snow-Slide.

William Schloss of St. Louis was killed in a snow-slide near Creede, Colo., at the entrance of a mine in which he had been working. The snow fell in a lump a distance of 1,000.

Their Last Run.

Engineer Stone, Brakeman Swegrengen, and Fireman Fuller, who were injured in the Rock Island Railway wreck at Troy Junction, Kan., recently, are dead.

MANGLED IN A WRECK.

HORROR ON A CHICAGO STREET CAR.

Four Passengers Killed and Fourteen Badly Wounded—Run Down by a Fort Wayne Engine—The Watchmen Not at Their Posts—Six Arrests Made.

Death in the Darkness.

Four people were killed and more than twice that number injured early Thursday morning by the collision of a Fort Wayne train with a crowded street-car of the Chicago City Railway at the 47th street and Stewart avenue crossing. The train which wrought such great disaster was made up of three cars containing laborers on their way to Colehour. The dead are: John Blaha, crushed to death; Archibald McAndrews, instantly killed; unidentified woman, supposed to be Mrs. M. Carson, address unknown; unknown man, horribly mangled.

The accident occurred at 6:10 o'clock, when the street cars were crowded with workmen. Car 197 going east on Forty-seventh street had at least fifty passengers on board. As it neared the tracks of the Fort Wayne and Wabash roads there was no warning of an approaching train. Within the ill-fated car sat the workmen smoking their clay pipes and chatting pleasantly, wholly unmindful of their impending danger. All at once there was a wild shriek of the engine, a clanging of the bell, and a construction train running at a high rate of speed crashed into the car, creating fearful havoc. There was no previous ringing of the bell, no conspicuous light on the engine which was moving backward, and the gateman and towerman at the crossing had failed wholly to do their duty. Neither was at his post.

The wreck occurred while it was still too dark for the driver or conductor of the street car to see 100 feet down the track. No one expected the construction train, and the first known of the danger was when the engine shrieked and the crash came. An instant later the killed and wounded were strewn along the frozen ground, the street car was a complete wreck, and the train rushed by, leaving a frightful scene of death and confusion behind. The horses broke loose from the car and ran away. Early risers in the vicinity rushed to the rescue of the passengers, and the alarm was turned into all the neighboring police stations. Three hundred yards south of the crossing the train came to a standstill, and the half a hundred workmen who were on board en route to work down the track hurried to the assistance of the injured.

Wildest Confusion Reigned.

Wild confusion reigned for the first few minutes. Those who had come to the work of rescue could hear the pitiful cries of the wounded and see the body of one dead man. Where to begin was a question which puzzled them. Five police patrol wagons arrived on the scene soon and policemen took charge of the work.

At first little attention was directed to the train which had done the damage, but after those about the car had been picked up it was found that the bodies of two men were under the tender. These were recovered.

The police at once placed six persons under arrest. These are Conductor Bernard O'Connor and Driver Patrick Stanley, who were on the street car; Engineer Rosscup and Fireman Meager, of the construction train; "Old John" Ullbright, gateman, and Peter Schwartz, towerman at the crossing. "Old John" was indicted last January for alleged carelessness when the freightful accident of Jan. 14 occurred at his crossing. Both the gateman and the towerman were in what is known as the ground house by the stove when the construction train came down the track.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXTENSION.

Little Prospect That President Harrison Will Take Action.

Washington special: A gentleman who has talked with the President on the subject says that the people who are expecting a large increase in the classified civil service before the administration changes will be very sadly disappointed. He said that the President is strongly inclined to extend the civil-service rules in connection with the Postoffice Department, but that he has practically abandoned the purpose of any general extension, such as the increase of the employes of the Government printing office or the customs service. All employes now outside the protecting lines of the civil-service regulations are using every endeavor to have themselves intrenched against Democratic interference, but so far without success.

There is a snag in the way of the extension of the civil service classification to the Government Printing Office. It is understood to be the desire of the President and of the Civil Service Commission that the office should be brought within the civil service classification, but there is trouble before them in the form of opposition by the Typographical Union. The objection to the extension of the service is raised that if appointments are made upon any form of examination which does not recognize membership of the union as a necessary qualification it will result in what the union would call "rats" getting into government employ. The government is hardly prepared to declare that none but union men shall be qualified for employment, and the union will certainly object to any employment within that class of persons not belonging to the union.

UNCLE SAM'S BIG GAIN.

The Destruction of Paper Money Has Benefited the Government.

In all that has been recently written about the depleted condition of the United States treasury little or no account has been taken of the fact that with each passing year the treasury is a large gainer by the complete destruction by casualty of its outstanding obligations, says a Washington dispatch. How much this amounts to, what percentage each year, etc., the best statisticians of the treasury department have no means of definitely ascertaining. No two of their figures are alike. Since 1862, when the Government began to issue paper money, $5,819,629,108 have been issued of all kinds and denominations up to July 1, 1892. Within the same period $4,853,451,629 have been redeemed, leaving outstanding on July 1, 1892, as a liability against the Government, $967,178,479. The basis for the redemption of this vast sum of paper varies—gold for the gold certificates, silver for the silver certificates—$100,000,000 in gold as a reserve for certain notes, and so on.

All this money is kept in the vaults awaiting the presentation of the paper for redemption. But much of this paper will never be presented. In an exhaustive inquiry on this subject made by United States Treasurer Hyatt it was estimated that the aggregate loss on all the issues up to January, 1888, would not be less than $8,700,000. This estimate did not include the fractional currency—"50 cents, 25 cents, 10 cents and 5 cent shin plasters"—in such extensive circulation for the few years following the war. Secretary Sherman construed the act of June 21, 1879, as stating that $8,475,934 of fractional currency issued under various acts had been destroyed, and the debt statement as issued monthly carries as a debt bearing no interest but $6,80[illegible]462.62 of this fractional currency. United States Treasurer Nebeker, however, carries the full amount on his books, and in his report this year states that more than $15,000,000 of this fractional currency is outstanding, though it has practically gone out of circulation, and but little more than $4,000 was presented for redemption last year. What is outstanding is held to a great extent by collectors of coin and paper cabinets, and its value as such is greater than its face value as money.

The aggregate of United States currency, fractional and otherwise, estimated to have been destroyed and not likely to be presented for redemption, approximates by these figures more than $14,000,000. A recent estimate prepared in the Treasury Department places the sum as high as $20,000,000. This money can only be taken out of the liabilities of the Government by Congressional enactment. This will probably be attempted in the near future.

The investigations into this subject have shown that most of the money lost has been destroyed in railroad wrecks that caught fire, though no inconsiderable quantity has been destroyed by fires that occurred in the country banks, postoffices and residences.

UPSET THE PLAN.

The President Vetoes Secretary Foster's Arrangements with Wall Street.

A New York correspondent says that Secretary of the Treasury Foster's trip to New York City was not on private business, as was given out officially, but was for the purpose of consulting Wall street magnates on the proposition to relieve the money market and check the export of gold by having the government issue from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 of bonds. The Wall street men were in favor of the scheme and the speculative contingent were in high feather. The President's co-operation had been counted on as sure, but this confidence was suddenly discovered to be delusive. The President not only refused to approve the deal, but he went further and expressed himself with unusual force and declared that he could see no excuse for issuing bonds, and, what was more, he did not propose that any should be issued while he was President.

According to Wall street reports, Secretary Foster, before he suddenly left town to go West, is credited with having received a dispatch from Washington couched in pretty stiff language and running substantially as follows:

> I want no new bonds issued under my administration. Take no steps. Do nothing.
> B. HARRISON.

He says that Mr. Foster met the Wall street men at a club house and a prolonged conference was held. Some of the most notable men in the street are said to have been present, and an agreement was formed on the financial policy of the Government. The action of President Harrison upset their plans entirely.

NO MERCY TO THE JEWS.

Barbarism of a Grand Duke—Cruel Edicts Being Enforced Relentlessly.

The latest advices from St. Petersburg and other parts of Russia show that the persecution of the Jews and the inhumanity of the Czar's officials toward that unhappy race are greater than ever before. Six edicts have been issued, aiming to disperse the Jewish subjects of Russia, weaken their position at trading centers and crush out their religion. These edicts are enforced with the utmost rigor in many parts of the empire and with severity everywhere.

The Moscow papers boast that, since the beginning of 1891, 20,000 Jews have been converted to orthodoxy. The unhappy converts, who have been driven to a pretended denial of their religious faith in order to escape intolerable persecution, have been deported to the district of Tcherkosovo, about five miles from Moscow. There they are rigorously governed by priests of the Russian orthodox church, who require them to attend the services of that church and to comply with its various rules, watching narrowly for any sign of evasion or repentance. These priests have entire supervision of the wretched colony, and the alleged converts from Judaism are only allowed leave to return to Moscow upon a certificate from the priests vouching that the convert holding such document is assured in the faith of the orthodox church.

TO START A RELIGIOUS DAILY.

Methodists Talk of a Paper in Chicago with 1,000,000 Subscribers.

It has developed that the Methodists propose something unique in daily journalism. At a convention of the Epworth League of Northern Wisconsin, at Hudson, a resolution was passed recommending that the Methodist Church of America begin the publication of a Daily Christian Advocate at Chicago, the editorials to be in line with advanced liberal religious thought, with sensational and objectionable news eliminated from the news columns. It is estimated that there are five million members of the Methodist Church in America, and the promoters of the scheme say that a daily could be started with a million subscribers. The influence of the paper, it is claimed, will be far reaching. Epworth Leagues throughout the country, it is understood, will pass similar resolutions, and the new venture will be launched in March or April.

THE UMBRIA ARRIVES.

DELAY CAUSED BY A BROKEN SHAFT.

The Overdue Cunarder Reaches New York After an Eventful Voyage—She Had Been Disabled by an Accident to Her Machinery.

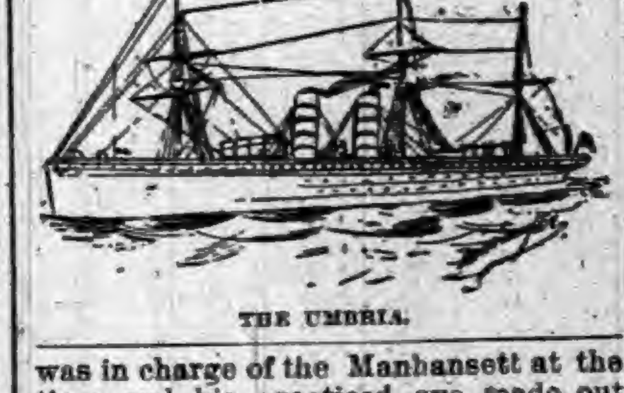
All on Board Are Safe.

The big Cunard steamer Umbria, so long the subject of anxious inquiry, is safe. So much was ascertained shortly after midnight Friday, when her lights were first sighted off Fire Island.

The news of her arrival was communicated at once to the New York office of the company, and Vernon D. Brown, the local agent, accompanied by a number of newspaper men, boarded the company's harbor tug and set out to intercept the steamer.

The ride out occupied an hour, says a New York dispatch. At 1:20 the tug drew up alongside the gangway and the party filed over the side. Every passenger on the steamer old enough to be allowed out at that hour was up and ready to welcome the visitors—the first tangible evidence that they were approaching the homes so many of them feared in days past they would never reach.

After days of anxiety, and when many were ready to believe that the big Cunarder with all on board had gone to the bottom of the Atlantic, the steamship Manhansett came into port and reported that when out eleven days from Swansea, and pounding along in a heavy gale, with the wind raising angry seas, she had sighted the Umbria laboring in the trough of the sea and drifting before the gale. The first mate was in charge of the Manhansett at the time and his practiced eye made out that all was not well. The vessel lay to the north of the Manhansett, about two miles out of her course, but in a moment all hands were ordered on deck. Capt. Duck and Second Mate Ellis came on deck immediately. The Manhansett went hurrying over the five-mile course at its best speed. Soon the Manhansett came near enough to her to see that the Umbria was not badly hurt.



THE UMBRIA.

The captain and the second mate got out the signal book, and the ships began to talk to each other.

"Who are you?" asked the Manhansett.

The Umbria told him, and said he was out from Liverpool for New York, and in reply to further questions stated that the shaft was broken and was undergoing repairs, and would be ready to-morrow.

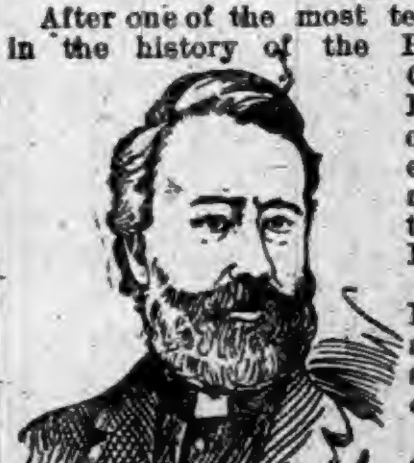
The Manhansett asked if any assistance was required and the Cunarder replied: "No. Report me to my owners." Then the Manhansett bade farewell. At that time the Cunarder was about 765 miles east of Sandy Hook, so that she had drifted considerably before the northwest gale that was blowing.

Cunard Agent Vernon H. Brown in speaking of the Umbria, said that Capt. McKay had been criticised because of his refusal to accept all proffered aid, but he certainly showed wonderful sagacity in declining all the assistance that was offered to him. "Suppose, for instance, that he had accepted assistance from either the Galileo, Moravia, or Manhansett; suppose also that either of these vessels, with the Umbria in tow, the gale which has been blowing from the northwest for the last week shifted to the east it would not be anything unusual if the towhawser parted. Her machinery would be disabled. She would be on a lee shore in a gale of wind, and nothing in the world could save her from destruction and her passengers from death.

Instead of that, however, Captain McKay refuses assistance, lies to 800 miles from shore, where he can drift and drift without getting into danger, and repairs his machinery, so that when he goes near the shore he will have his ship under full control. That is what I consider good seamanship. The Umbria had the whole Atlantic to drift in, and if the storm got too strong for her she could take in her sea-anchors, hoist sail, turn her stern to the wind, and run before the storm. I was thoroughly convinced that the Umbria was all right, and would come into this port in perfect safety. Capt. McKay has shown himself to be a man of great caution and ability.

ACQUITTAL OF DR. BRIGGS.

New York Presbytery Refuses to Sustain Any of the Charges.



DR. BRIGGS.

After one of the most tedious trials in the history of the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Briggs, accused of heresy, has been acquitted by the New York Presbytery.

Professor Briggs was arraigned on six specific charges.

The voting on the first charge was begun at 4 o'clock, and the vote on the sixth charge was completed and the Presbytery adjourned shortly before six o'clock. The result of the several ballots was then announced. The result was a great surprise, for on all the six counts the vote was adverse to sustaining the charges.

On the first charge, accusing Prof. Briggs with teaching that the reason is a source of divine authority, the vote was as follows: To sustain the charge, 60; against sustaining the charge, 68.

On the second charge which accuses Prof. Briggs with teaching that the church is a source of divine authority, there were 55 votes cast in favor of sustaining the charge and 71 against.

The closest vote was on the third charge, that Prof. Briggs taught that the Scriptures contained errors of history and fact. On this charge the vote was as follows: To sustain the charge, 61; against, 68.

After this vote had been taken two or three of the anti-Briggs men left the court, and others refrained from voting on the last three charges.

On the fourth charge, accusing Prof. Briggs with teaching that Moses was not the author of the Pentateuch, the result was: To sustain the charge, 53; against, 72.

The vote on the fifth charge, accusing Prof. Briggs with teaching that Isaiah did not write many of the chapters in the book bearing his name, was: In favor of sustaining the charge, 49; against, 70.

The vote on the sixth charge, accusing Prof. Briggs of teaching that sanctification is progressive after death, was: To sustain the charge, 57; against, 69.

The friends of Dr. Briggs were greatly pleased with the result. They had calculated on a majority ranging from four to six.

A COMPLETE SET OF THE WORKS OF CHARLES DICKENS
FREE!
The Most Valuable and Remarkable Premium Ever Offered Free with any Periodical.
A MARVEL IN BOOK-MAKING.
A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, IN 12 LARGE VOLUMES, FREE.

There has just been published A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, in Large and Handsome Volumes, printed from entirely new plates, with new type. By special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer to our patrons this splendid set of Dickens' Works, postpaid, free. Charles Dickens was the greatest novelist who ever lived. No author before or since his time has won the fame that he achieved, and his works are even more popular to-day than during his lifetime. They abound in wit, humor, pathos, masterly delineation of character, vivid descriptions of places and incidents, thrilling and skilfully wrought plots. Each book is intensely interesting. No home should be without a set of these great and remarkable works. Not to have read them is to be far behind the age in which we live. The twelve volumes in this set contain the following world-famous works, each one of which is published complete, unchanged and absolutely unabridged:

DAVID COPPERFIELD,
MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT,
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY,
DOMBEY AND SON,
BLEAK HOUSE,
LITTLE DORRIT,
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND,

We have lately published, at great expense and labor a perfect wonder in the way of an illustrated Gift Book, suitable to all classes, an ornament to any home, and at a price that brings it within the reach of all, even those of moderate means. Heretofore only those who indulged in luxuries have felt that they could afford a book of this class, as they are sold in book stores at $5.00 and upwards. The book which we offer is not in any way inferior to those above referred to, but is far superior to hundreds of books of this nature that are sold at prices exceeding ours by an enormous per cent. It is selling with a rush wherever shown. Agents have only to show the book and mention the price, and it sells on its merits without further talking. No better Christmas, New Year's or Birthday present can be selected. It will sell, not only for holiday trade, but at all seasons of the year, for the reason that all will want it in their homes, and will have it as soon as they know the low price at which our agents can furnish them. Reader, if you need profitable [illegible] and a business in which you can and will [illegible] as well as make money rapidly, do not fail to send for circulars containing private terms to agents and full information, which will be sent FREE upon application. Old and new agents alike are making [illegible] salaries—yes, fortunes. Many of those who are making the best records are now at the agency business, having had no previous experience. Make a start—the field is entirely new. No such terms have been offered agents as we now offer on this wonderful book. Special qualifications not necessary, for it sells everywhere at sight. Perhaps you have at some time been unsuccessful at the agency business. If so, there is every reason why you should try this, the PRINCE of gift books, as failure is impossible if you make A START. Write us to-day, study our circulars and directions, then order an outfit and go to work with push and energy. You may make the greatest mistake of your life, if you allow this GOLDEN opportunity to pass unimproved.

ROASTER & BAKER

BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THE STORY OF ULLA.

Told at the Edge of the Northern Sea, and Written for This Paper.

BY EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD.

CHAPTER IV.

We crept out by the green island of Thymnoes, where the white sheep were feeding to the water's edge, and past Goddo on our right, and the long, black shore of Bommels on the left, and so by many a green oeland and dark rock out into the spray and fresh salt wind went joyfully lurching the old Sea Wolf. The frothy pillow of the foam glittering under her prow, and behind the green wall of the Norway pines, and the gray rocks, and the sweet sea surge that tumbled forever at their feet and threw its white arms up as though, lover-like, it would enlace its silver fingers with the green hair of the nodding braches overhead. Down went our gallant shore, down peak, and pine, and point, and as the great black bosom of our mother sea opened to us, her firstling sons, proudly we turned our faces westward and each eye grew bright at thought of the plunder to come, and each heart beat high as we smelt the incense of fight in the strong breath of the sea. Oh! but I was proud as, my hand on the pulsing tiller that throbbed under the racing surges not less loudly than my heart, I stood by the high stern and led the wild, free song to Odin, wherewith my gallant company mocked the waves—proud! Oh, the salt spray rises again in these old eyes of mine but to remember the fierce wine of life that usurped my blood and flew here and there in my young veins that day; this cold mind of mine burns again but to recall the ecstasy of the unfettered passions that then beset me; but to think for an ungodly minute on those splendid vistas of unbridled lust and cruelty and rapine which dazed my soul.

Well! it is over, and I do wrong even to remember. No more the salt wind takes the war song of Ulla, like a herald of death, to the land of the stranger; no more for him is the joyful rattle of the ranged shields clattering on his vessel's side as she stoops to the steep blue valleys of the midland sea; no more the old viking's plough shall turn that frothy furrow he did once delight in; no more the lovely smoke of burning thorps shall rise from Ulla's torch to Odin's footstool; no more his stern heart shall melt to pleasure as his vessel staggers homeward through the yeast and spume, and every swirl of the cold dark water spinning enviously against her laboring side tell of rich plunder hid within. It is over for me, but it was a noble frenzy while it lasted. All that noon of our setting out we plunged before a favoring wind across the salt water, and by the second evening the wave began to wear another color as the sea shealed up to the British shore. At the same time the breeze gave out with the sun and we took to our sweeps, and all night long under the starlight the Sea Wolf crept silently and secretly into the land. In the gray of the morning that followed a haze grew up and under the curtain of the white sea mist that lay soft and heavy as wool on the gently rocking sea we heard the sound of the waves beating on the dim North Umbrian shore. We approached as close as we dared, and then waited for the sun, rolling an idle hour or two on the smooth, long heave of the swell, and, in the dead silence, listening to the chatter of the wild fowl and the laugh of the kittiwake on the unseen cliffs; or the chafe and creak of an oar now and then in the rowlocks and the hiss of the water swirling gently against our sides. So still lay the Sea Wolf in the shadow of the morning mist that the shy grebes and speckled divers came paddling all about her and stared with eyes bead black with wonder to see the silver mist turn on a sudden into a painted hulk with ranked oars, and great damp sail aflap against the ruddy mast, and golden dragon head sniffing the chill morning air aloft, and grim warriors leaning on battle-ax and spear crowding her deck. And strange fish swam lapping round, and the swift gannet's white pinions stirred Hafdan's listless flag as she swept unheeding by through the milky haze. No man among us spoke until on a sudden the curling wavelets in the east sparkled with liquid fire, the hanging shroud of whiteness flushed with a yellow radiance, a strange, bright light shone through the green-crested waves, and as the free, sweet breath of the morning drifted down upon us, and each man drank of it deep and silently, the curtain of the night was lifted, and the yellow feet of the sun came striding over the black plains of the restless northern sea.

Silent and deep we laughed with pleasure, and my grim, stout fellows shook the mist-beads from their tawny lips, then—muttering a prayer to Odin—again the white water fretted under the stern of our ship and the long, slow dip of the oars fell with a pleasant sound on the calm of the morning. Round under the rugged knees of great cliffs crept the Wolf, so secret and swift that the speckled loons stood agape in rows to watch the golden dragon head go dipping by their lonely eyries, and the blue pigeon on her cavern shelf astride of her white eggs stood wonderstruck and forgot to fly—thus she went across the mouth of lovely bays and under grassy headlands and big bights fringed with endless lonely meadows and past fair estuaries where rank fields of westral crops were all awaste between neglected woodlands and southward constantly for many an hour, but nothing could we see to sack or burn. Noon came and went, and the warm sweat glazed the sinewy forearms of my gallant rowers until at last I saw them begin to turn their bronze faces over their hither shoulders and angrily scan the ruined shore and swear deep between their strong white teeth; swear at the Dane who had swept this fair country so clean, swear at Biorn Grimsar, and Hakonson the avaricious, and Inge the bloody, and Guthern of Hagbard, who had pillaged here last autumn and wiped out maid and matron, croft and castle, and left nothing for any honest viking who came after them. Ay! it was sad, we thought, to see so sweet a country so void of life, and we pulled on southward for many miles, looking now on the sunny shore made by nature to be rich and happy, and yet had nothing on it to burn or plunder, and then turning sadly to our piles of bloodless swords and battle axes, our empty treasure boxes and untenanted rows of iron fetters for the white ankles of fair British girls. We had rowed on like this, cursing Biorn and Inge and Hakonson all the morning, and had seen nothing but the blackened ruins of a few villages upon the hillside, when, slipping by one lonely promontory, we saw upon the rocks a mad old woman, sad-eyed and lean and pinched, sole remnant of some pillaged English hamlet, who knew us for what we were upon the instant as she gathered her poor harvest on the beach and leaped upon a rock and cursed us fiercely out of the black reservoir of her despair and hatred, cursed us for pirates and tyrants, asked where were the two-yellow-haired girls we stole ten years ago, where her two tall sons, where her husband and her kin, and tossed her tangled locks upon the wind and yelled and cried until, as we crept by, Thoralf of Visund took a javelin from the heap upon the deck and mocked her. "Where, you foul old sea hag? Where? Why, down in hell. Go there and look." And as he spoke the javelin flew, and, too true, struck its mark and pierced deep into the old crone's withered bosom, and with a scream of surprise and deathless hatred she spun round upon her heels and grinned and staggered and then plunged headlong into the sea at her feet, and as we passed her crimson blood was spreading in a great red pool upon the dark heave of the smooth flowing surf.

I know not whether it were true, as some among my comrades thought, that that thin old blood spilt so would bring us luck, but presently it is true enough we had another sign, for a raven came flying off from the land and circled round us and fell into our wake behind, and as the black wings of Odin's friend and messenger went flapping overhead a new spirit was born in my fierce crew. They stretched their hands to heaven and shouted with one voice a verse from out the raven war song, then down they went and with new courage stretched them to their oars until the red viking flag streamed bravely out astern and the shields rattled joyfully and the water lay in a white streak along the low-dipping gunwale of the old Sea Wolf. Cape and bay and headland slipped by. We had come into a better peopled country, when on a sudden a Dane who kept our fore-watch slapped his hand upon his thigh and cried: "A burgh! a burgh! and not yet plundered!" And there, following the point of his eager finger, we saw, three miles away, a strong hall upon a rocky promontory, with trees and meads about it green and fair, and sheep upon the hills and clustering huts below, all sweet and peaceful, and a little harbor—everything, indeed, that could glad a viking heart; and, truly grateful, we thanked the bird that had brought us fortune, and paused in a little creek to wait for nightfall.

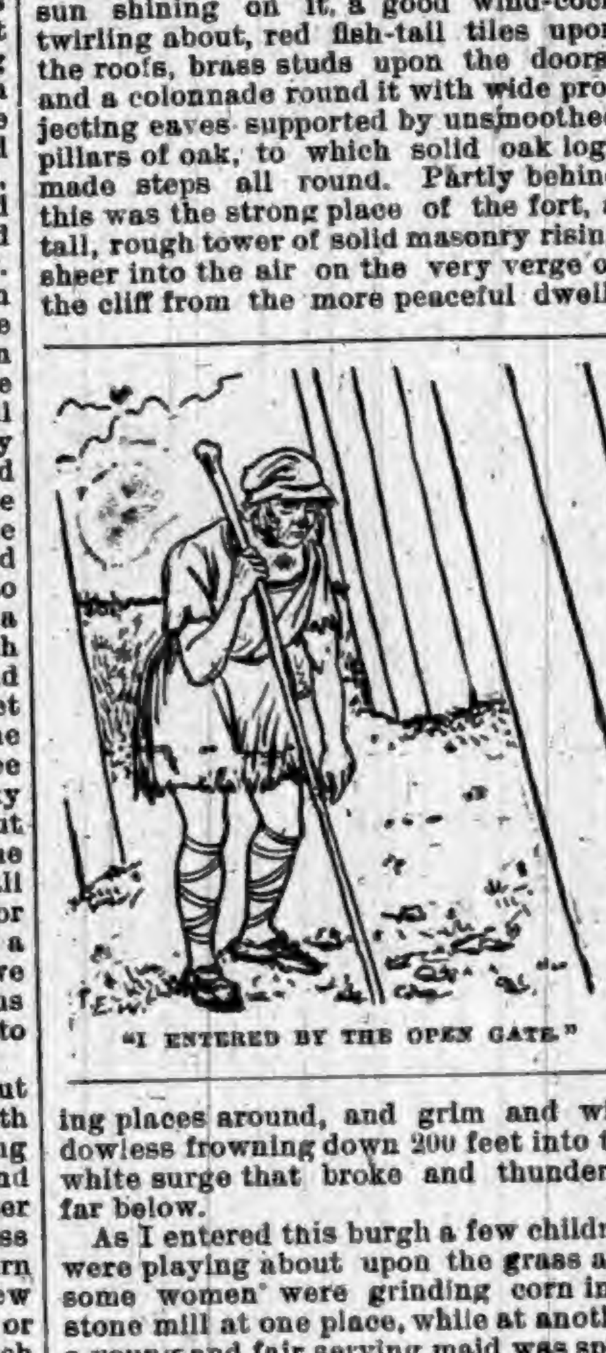
All the afternoon the longship lay out of sight in the little cavern bay with cliffs, green-tasseled with hanging grasses, nearly meeting overhead, and below the smooth swell of the water heaving the long tangles of sea grass and weeds, and idly reflecting the stern faces and golden mail of that grim crew on board lolling about upon the deck or hanging over the loaded bulwark to watch the shining fishes at play deep down below. Who would have thought that pretty shadow listlessly rolling there on the heave of the wave was bent on such an errand? It was so still as we lay screened in the cover that you could hear the larks singing to themselves high up in the blue over the cliff grass, and the bubble and play of the water in the crevices of the rocks all round us; it was so still that presently this monotony grew wearisome to my fierce and heated spirit. I chafed and turned and impatiently watched the sun which seemed as though it would never set, until at last a happy idea entered into my head—I would go and spy this burgh we were to plunder, see how big and strong it was, how many men held it and how much profit we were like to come by in the venture. With this fancy in my mind I roused my handsome sleepy fellows, who, at my voice stretched their great limbs where they had lain sleeping on the rowers' benches or turned their eyes from gazing on the shining sea to look on one another and say "Ulla is mad! young Ulla Erlingson is wholly mad!" But I pointed out how the madness would vantage us, how greatly it would help us to know the lie and nature of the hold, how I could disguise myself so that my mother should not know me, and learn and see all I could and be back again with them safe and sound, "or by dangling on a gibbet above the highest roof gave them something new to fight for"—as Sarp of Reyr said—before the twilight fell.

CHAPTER V.

Like the brave fellows that they were, the bold fancy pleased them, and forthwith I was disguised as a ragged outcast, with a slouch hat and sorry coat and dirty-gartered legs, with worn wolfskin sandals; my yellow hair was knotted up and hidden in my cap, my face was daubed gray and lean with ash and mud, and with a little paint good Vedrey put a sore or two upon my naked arms such as might come by want and long travel, and with a touch of red and green made to look most hideously new a long-healed wound or two I had upon my bosom. I seemed when it was done so miserable and lean and put so pitiful a whine into my voice and leant so heavy on my long ash staff that all my jolly vikings fell a-laughing, and laughed so loud they hushed the droning of the blue pigeon brooding on her eggs and started the shaggy, green-eyed sea crows from their rocky pinnacles a mile away, and then they rowed me to a landing, and with jest and sage advice sent me on my dangerous errand.

It was a sweet place, that English burgh. Even now, long years after, I, old and wrinkled, still dream in the winter nights of the warm incense of that afternoon, and how the grateful sun drew fragrance from out the earth, and how sweet the yellow meadow flowers did smell about it, and how the apples blossomed on the hanger; and then across my evening vision even now there comes the black reek of its burning thatch and the hot steam of the blood in the hall by the banquet tables—ay, I conjure again all these years after in restless slumber the shine of its many roofs a-basking in the April sun, the blue-eyed children rolling in frolic sport about the grassy court—the twittering love songs of the new-come swallows on the roof ridge—and then athwart my sleep the black column of avenging smoke leaps to the star-lit midnight sky, the cruel tongues of leaping crimson flame spring up, and the fierce, gasping cry of stricken men, the piercing shriek of women, and the low wail of butchered little ones affright my old and unstrung ears!

Ay, it seemed a sweet place that untouched, ancient English citadel as I hobbled out from the hazels and humble and decrepit as became me, craved its hospitality. All inland — stretching away into the dim blue distance—lay fertile fields and woods, shining greener than any other woods can shine, with brooks and streams between them flashing in the light, and splendid herds, enough to feast an army for a year, knee deep in the many colored grasses, and then all this richness swept round by the shore of a little crescent bay to here where on a gently rising promontory the prince's castle stood. It stood upon the very topmost flat of the hill, and was approached from below by a rough track fashioned of beams laid side by side, which circled up through the gorse and fern to its outer fence. Getting out upon that track I walked up the hill, secretly noting as I went each stock and stone of cover, and soon came to the first sweep of outer stockade. This was a great circle of pointed timbers sloping outward over a ditch from the crest of a tall earthen rampart—strong fence, indeed, and one that twenty men might hold against a hundred. I entered through the open gate of this and right in front rose another rampart and another palisade that made me sigh to look on—I had to walk half-way round the grassy flat between these two before I found a gate to pass the second timbers. But this latter entrance gained, it made me master of the place. Those two tall fences, strong in oaken timbers, mossy gates and iron rivets, shut in the whole hilltop, of which the other boundary was the sheer cliffs that dropped steep down into the sea below. And all this space was full of sheds and buildings, and huts and houses, and granaries of corn and stacks of fodder for the beasts, and corn for soldiers, and here a thrashing floor, and there a well with rope and bucket, yonder a row of ovens and a drinking trough and much else. Then came a grassy green and next, along the verge, a little aloof from all, the prince's house. A fine wide house it stood upon the crag, with terraces and courts, doors and windows, strong stone outer walls and timbered arches, a goodly place, indeed, with the sun shining on it, a good wind-cock twirling about, red fish-tail tiles upon the roofs, brass studs upon the doors, and a colonnade round it with wide projecting eaves supported by unsmoothed pillars of oak, to which solid oak logs made steps all round. Partly behind this was the strong place of the fort, a tall, rough tower of solid masonry rising sheer into the air on the very verge of the cliff from the more peaceful dwelling places around, and grim and windowless frowning down 200 feet into the white surge that broke and thundered far below.



"I ENTERED BY THE OPEN GATE."

As I entered this burgh a few children were playing about upon the grass and some women were grinding corn in a stone mill at one place, while at another a young and fair serving maid was spinning flax upon the steps of the chief's house. A dog or two lay basking in the sun, and as they saw me and fell a-barking the damsel stopped her spinning, the corn mill came to a stop under the hands of the old crones, and the little ones fled to cover like a flock of startled partridges. But I looked harmless enough, a ragged fellow there by the gate, gaunt and humble, and presently seeing they were reassured I advanced slowly and begged of the younger woman in the meanest whine my wit could master a drink of milk and an oaten cake to stay my hunger. That fair foreigner got up and took me into the hall—and a splendid hall it was—and put me at the servant's tressel, then calling some others, set milk and bread before me. So I ate and drank and all the time kept counting the golden plates and ewers on the master's distant table and scanning his weapons or costly furs hung round the hall, and thinking how much my ship could carry home. Ay, and as each fair damsel filled my horn and platter, asking me in gentle civility the while of my home and wayfaring, little did she know that I was wondering how much she would fetch at the slave stakes in Throndjem market place, or whether she would scream greatly that night or no. Indeed, those comely, red-haired English maidens were so civil that had they not been barbarians and thus to us what the hinds of the valley are to the hill wolves and the speckled salmon to the gray ospreys I might almost have rued the red night's work that was at hand. But as things were, I should have blushed as soon to think myself compassionate as coward, and thus I laughed and chatted with them, and while I finished my bowl learned of those incautious women tongues that all the men were away inland; that the women and children from all round came in and the palisades were closed at nightfall, and saving some half-dozen herders there were to be no men in the burgh that night. I learnt that their master had a fair daughter, though I saw her not, as she was then spinning with her maidens in the turret; that the master was wondrous rich, but old and feeble, and thus, having learned all I hoped for, with a last quick look round the place, I rose to go. As I turned one gentle maid put a silver penny that she had taken from a little store in the corner of her thread box into my hand. "Farewell," she said, "old man, and may the good God guide you; it ever grieves my heart to see one poor and hungry," and that penny was put out at good interest, for that very night, when the burgh was burning, I saved her from the brief wooing of Vidkun the rough, and, leading her to the foss, showed her the coin and, pointing to the dark shade of the thickets, let her go free and unharmed. Thus I rejoined my comrades and told them all I had seen.

MISS MYRTLE GWIN was awarded $2,500 damages from young Sohn in the breach-of-promise case at Marion. Sohn is the son of one of Marion's most prominent citizens.

WILLIAM DRIEDEL of Jeffersonville, was sitting in his store the other night when some one fired a pistol shot through the window, the bullet cutting off some of his hair.

A STRANGE man, giving his name as Henry Bryant, was found lying in a cinder pile near the rolling mill in Brazil. He was frozen nearly to death and unable to utter a word.

THAT baby skeleton story from Frankfort turns out a fizzle. The skeleton was the bones of a cat, and the detective who was looking up the "murder mystery" is confined to his bed.

A SAFETY valve in the engine room of the picture molding factory in Evansville was found to be tied down. There is no doubt but some rascal had attempted to cause an explosion.

NICHOLAS SIEBERT, a wealthy farmer living near Evanville, has become insane on religious questions, and threatens to kill all of his relatives, because, he says, the divine power has so decreed.

MRS. SAMUEL MCCOSKY of Staunton, the wife of a coal miner in Brazil, has fallen heir to an estate valued between $50,000 and $75,000 by the death of a distant relative in the State of New York.

HARRISON SHEARER, while chopping wood near the Garden City brick-yards at Valparaiso, found an elk horn about three feet long in a hollow tree. The horn must have rested in its hiding-place nearly one hundred years.

JAMES SANDER'S barn, at Wheatland, was burned the other night. A fine stallion and a quantity of feed, grain, and implements were consumed. Loss, $2,000. Incendiarism is supposed to have been the origin of the fire.

CHARLEY GREGG and Douglass Mills, two Crawfordsville boys, met with serious accidents on the railroad the other day. The former was thrown from a freight car and badly bruised and Mills was struck by an engine, losing a leg.

THE Montgomery County Agricultural Association offered a prize for the best bushel of corn which will be sent to the World's Fair. There were nine entries and the prize was given to Maxwell McCullough. M. B. Waugh was second.

JUDGE HACKNEY, Shelbyville, has decided that Lambert Goldsmith must stand trial for the killing of Robert Skillman. This case has attracted much attention in legal circles. Goldsmith was tried once before, but the verdict was set aside on account of the sickness of one of the jurors.

FRED FRITZ, a farmer residing near Jackson Center, Porter County, was called upon by two lightning-rod men, who made a proposition to rod the house occupied by Fritz for $5, as an advertisement. The house was not his own, but he was finally persuaded into it and to signing what he supposed was a document to show that he had paid for the work, but which proved to be a contract for putting up rods amounting to $240. He refused to pay, but compromised by paying the swindlers $125.

LOUIS, the 14-year-old son of Samuel Lowery, residing five miles south of Kokomo, was accidentally shot by his brother-in-law, Jud Rhodes. It is thought the injury is fatal. The weapon was a 38-calibre revolver, which was supposed to be empty.

JOHN C. WINGATE of Montgomery County, has been given judgment for $2,400 against the Clover-Leaf Railway for the injury of his wife who, in attempting to get off a passenger train, was violently thrown from the platform by the starting of the cars. She sued and recovered $10,000 and then her husband entered suit.

AUGUST ANDERSON, section hand employed on the Michigan division of the Big Four road, near Sodus, was killed by being struck by engine 618, drawing the pay car. The section men were on a hand car and jumped off when the pay train appeared, but Anderson, instead of getting off the track, remained on the rails, was run down, hurled some distance by the locomotive and dreadfully mangled.

JAMES HOBBS of Bedford, while at work in the Salem and Bedford stone quarries' mills, was killed, his body being crushed in a horrible manner. He was transferring a large stone, which got beyond his control and fell on him. He was marri

The Wives of Barca.

In the valley of the Barca in Abyssinia there is, according to a recently returned traveler, a community where the women, without holding a meeting or agitation of any kind, have emancipated themselves. All the women work hard while the men are idle, but by way of compensation the house and all it contains belongs to the wife. At the least unkind word she turns the husband out at night, in storm or rain, and he can't come back until he makes amends by the gift of a cow. The wife considers it a duty to abuse the husband, and if she were weak enough to show any love for him in life or grief at his death she would be scorned by her tribe. The wife, without any reason, may strike her tent and go, taking with her one-third of the joint possessions. The husband, unless he is traveling, may not live out of his tent, but the wife may go to her parents for a year and annul for the time her own marriage.

In all of this the secret of emancipation toward which women are blindly struggling is hidden. The emancipation of the wife comes only when she entirely supports her lord and master, thus rendering herself indispensable to his comfort. And possibly emancipation on these terms might not be as desirable as the present regime of shopping in the morning, taking a nap in the afternoon, and accompanying somebody to the theater at night.

Two Imperial German Spendthrifts.

It is not generally known that the German Empress, in spite of her many excellent qualities, is very extravagant and owes large sums of money to many of the Berlin tradesmen, one firm alone having a bill of 800,000 marks, or £40,000, against her majesty. The Empress never wears either a dress, a mantle or a bonnet the second time in public, and everything that she buys is of the very best.

The Emperor is also very largely in debt, in spite of the handsome present made to him last spring by the Empress Frederick, who advanced him 1,500,000 marks. The Emperor has, unfortunately, not the slightest idea of money, and scatters it right and left, to the great horror of many of his loyal subjects.—London World.

Harper's Magazine.

ILLUSTRATED.

Harper's Bazar is a journal for the home. It gives the fullest and latest information about Fashions, and its numerous illustrations, Paris designs and pattern sheet supplements are indispensable alike to the home dressmaker and the professional modiste. No expense is spared to make its artistic attractiveness of the highest order. Its bright stories, amusing comedies, and thoughtful essays satisfy all tastes, and its last page is famous as a budget of wit and humor. In its weekly issue everything is included which is of interest to woman. The serials for 1893 will be written by Walter Besant and Edna Lyall. Christine Terhune Herrick will furnish a practical series, entitled "At the Toilet." Grace King, Olive Thorne Miller and Candace Wheeler will be frequent contributors. The work of women in the Columbian Exposition will be fully represented with many illustrations. T. W. Higginson, in "Woman and Men," will please a cultivated audience.

What the Deaf Want.

The deaf ask not for pity; it is distasteful to them; They ask not for charity, they do not need it. One thing they do ask, and only one—an education, which is the birthright of the American child. Give them that and they will rise superior to their misfortune, working out their destiny in life side by side with their brothers and sisters who can hear. The deaf are often accused of seeking one another's society altogether to much. We must admit that deaf mutes do associate togteher and seem to enjoy each other's society. I have been told by some of the most intelligent deaf mutes and semi-mutes, that they connot always mingle as freely as they wish with their hearing friends, because the latter do not welcome them into their society. Even those who are brought most frequently in contact with the deaf seldom show them the courtesy they show to hearing friends.

We say it is very ridiculous to be deaf, especially if you are of those pitiable objects, a semi-mute, and have acquired in some degree that very uncertain art of lip reading. What emotions do we experience when strangers mistaking you for an ordinary person address you and finding you can't understand, and thinking you only a little hard of hearing, yell loud enough to arouse the dead senses We cannot help becoming impatient sometimes, at what we term the want of common sense and delicacy some people manifest when they meet those who labor under some misfortune. In addressing a deaf person it is not necessary to make an exhibition and attract the attention of all within sight or at ear shot distance. Such efforts only tend to confuse us, and incite the risibility of all who see such efforts. As a rule the more naturally you speak the more easily you are understood. We do not study the lips alone but every muscle and expression of the face. The more naturally you speak and the less effort you make the better you are understood; speak distinctly to the lip reader but never mind about opening the mouth any wider than usual. We lip readers want to see the lips and not a full display of the vocal organs. Words as written or spelt are slow and tedious to most hearing people, and if the object in view be to break down as far as possible the barriers that separate the deaf from the hearing, world; articulation does it more effectally than any other method. Articulation when thoroughly mastered not only enables a person to speak to others but also to read what they say in reply, and, but that it is necessary to speak slowly and carefully and that it is somewhat fatiguing to the eye, if long continued at a time, the articulationist would be on an equal footing as far as utility of speech is concerned with a hearing person. Of course the pleasure of sound which makes speech so delightful would be always wanting. No sensible deaf mute asks or expects, indeed would scorn to accept, any special privileges or immunities on account of his deafness. But they do expect to receive the courtesy and politeness that is supposed to be general among well bred people

From social thoughts I often shrink.
  What else would pleasure give to me,
Because it is a pain to think,
  That I unwittingly may be,

A weary trial and a tax,
  On patience strength and courtesy,
And seeming in politeness lack,
  Or gentleness or modesty.

Oh! I have felt in days gone by,
  What gave me pain, but ne'er offense,
And watched many a heavy sigh,
  A tittering smile at my expense;
I pray that heaven these may save,
  From pains and stings like those they gave.

THE Herald, a labor and peop's' paper at Ft. Wayne, has stopped. Didn't pay. Why didn't they move it to Auburn, where our people's party men could blow in a few more of their hard earned dollars.

THERE are 1785 railway companies in the United States, their total capital 9,829 millions, an average value of nearly $6,000 per mile of road. The number of men employed is 784,285 being 486 for each 100 miles. And the business is still increasing. Those who believe the government ought to buy up all these roads, ought to study these figures, and find out where the money to buy and operate them would come from.

WHEN republicans wanted to seat Hayes, they refused to accept the certificate of the governor of Oregon, that one democratic elector had been chosen there, for that would have elected Tilden. They said a majority of the canvassing board must rule, and the other two men happened to be republicans. In the present Montana case, two democrats certified to the election of a democrat, and one republican against. But the one republican was given the preference. It was the other man's ox.

RICHARD W. THOMPSON, of Terre Haute, who was secretary of the navy under Hayes, was later the agent of French capitalists in pushing the Panama Canal scheme, at a salary of $25,000 with no work. It is now shown by a committee appointed by the French parliament, that two thirds of all the money raised was used to bribe influential men or newspapers, Of 260 millions raised but a small part was used on the canal. Poor stockholders were swindled.

Obituary.

Uriah Butler died at the home of his son-in-law, J. B. Sponhower, in Auburn, Dec. 27, 1892. He was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., Oct. 31, 1812, so that at the time of his death his age was 81 years, 1 month and 26 days. He leaves a wife and six children and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. He had been a professing christion for fifty years. Funeral services were at the church of God, on Friday, Dec. 30, conducted by Rev. I. M. Thomas, and he was laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery

Waterloo Fair Meeting.

At the meeting of the agricultural society in Waterloo last Thursday the following officers were elected to serve the coming year: R. M. Lockhart, pres., A. D. Moore, vice-pres; M. Remembered their Pastor.

Twenty-five years of faithful service should be properly appreciated. And so thought the people of the Garrett Catholic church, when, as announced in the COURIER last week, they realized the fact that Father Young had been for a quarter of a century laboring for his church and people as a minister. The anniversary was Sunday, Jan. 1, and Father Young had discouraged any demonstration not only on account of the day, but because of the uncertain state of his health which would forbade any any excitement. So he supposed the matter would stand so. But to his surprise, at the close of the forenoon service he was presented with three fine sanctuary chairs and other tokens of the respect in which his people held him. This was pleasant of course, as was also the fact that the children of the Sisters' school, as well as the Catholic Knights in full uniform, escorted him to to the church, when it came time for services. And again that evening, he was surprised by a visit from Father Daemig, of Avilla, who kindly staid and conducted the evening services. As they left the church for the residence Father Young noticed, there were no lights in the house except in the rear room. Going in there, the first thing they saw was a fine sideboard, and a lovely set of dishes. This was indeed a surprise, and they stopped a minute to discuss it. Then they opened the door to the large front rooms, and stepped in, All was dark, but just then, someone "pressed a button" and the electric lights flashed out showing the house full of people. It was the climax of the surprise, and they passed an hour or two very pleasantly, besides adding a purse of about $60 to the others gifts to the pastor. The reverend gentleman feels much gratified by these tokens of appreciation from those for whom he has labored so long.

You Should Have Been There.

Yes we mean every word of it, when we say that you—all the people of Auburn, should have been at the campfire entertainment given by the W. R. C., at the G. A. R., Hall, last Friday evening. It was a grand success in every way. It is always the case when the women of this place, and especially the members of the Relief Corps, that everything must come up to the highest standard of excellence. The program had been carefully arranged, and the names called, were responded to with selections, either in song or recitation, that showed a skill and tact in rendition peculiarly adapted to ability of a higher order than the commonest. As a certain prominent member of the corps said: "We believe more people would attend these meetings if they knew what good programs had been arranged". These campfire meetings are held once a month during the winter season, and we take the privilege of making this unqualified expression, that some very fine programs will be rendered during the coming months. Among those who took an active part, were David and Esther Greenewald of the Junction, Tommy Husselman, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Simpson, Pheby Fretz and many others whose names we did not get. As a musician on the harmonica and guitar, Mr. Greenewald has few equals in this part of the country. There is something delicately attractive about his playing, that strikes a respondent chord in the heart, and at the same time does not fill the ear with harsh gratings, which oftimes characterizes professionals. Miss Esther Greenewald is a very clever declaimer, Miss Fretz has flattering prospects as an elocutionist. Though quite young, she gave a very able rendition of "De Montfort," an extract from one of Joanna Baillie's masterpieces, Of the others, we can say they did themselves great credit.

The Century Magazine in 1893.

It would be hard for a person who cares for good reading to make a better investment than a year's subscription to The Century Magazine. No region is too remote, no expense too great, if it will only produce what the Century's readers want. This is the policy that has made it, as the Pall Mall Budget, of London, says: "By far the best of the magazines, English or American."

The November number begins a new volume and contains the first chapters of a powerful novel of New York society, called "Sweet Bells out of Tune," written by Mrs. Burton Harrison, the author of "The Anglomaniacs." In this story the fashionable wedding, the occupants of the boxes in the Metropolitan Opera House, the "smart set" in the country house are faithfully reflected, and the illustrations by Charles Dana Gibson, "Life's" well known cartoonist, are as brilliant as the novel.

In this November number begins also a great series of papers on "The Bible and Science," opening with "Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors," by Prof. Shields, of Princeton, who takes decided ground that the Bible does not, contain scientific errors of any moment, and who most interestingly states the case from his point of view. Other articles in this series will include one in the December (Christmas) number, "The effect of Scientific Study upon Religious Beliefs."

An important series of letters that passed between General Sherman and his brother Senator John Sherman are also printed in November, which number contains also contributions from the most distinguished writers, including an article by James Russell Lowell, which was not quite completed at the time of his death. The suggestion which Bishop Potter makes in the November Century as to what could be done with the World's Fair if it were opened on Sunday, is one which seems the most practical solution of the problem yet offered.

The December Century was a great Christmas number,—full of Christmas stories, Christmas poems, and Christmas pictures,—and in it began the first chapters of a striking novel of life in Colorado, "Benefits Forgot," by Wolcott Balestier, who wrote "The Naulahka" with Rudyard Kipling.

Papers on good roads, the new educational methods, and city government are soon to come. Four dollars will bring you this splendid magazine for one year, and certainly no cultivated home can afford to be without it. Subscribers can remit directly to the publishers. The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York. They should begin with November, and so get first chapters of all the serials, including "Sweet Bells out of Tune."

Those who took pains to watch the old year out Saturday night heard a variety of factory whistles, but no church bells. And the morning brought a big snow storm, giving the day the appearance of the old time holiday.

Milas Brown is one of the few farmers who keep an ox team. It looks like old times to see him come to town with a wagon load of wood or anything from the farm, driving his oxen along the street. He has a good yoke of them, and finds them very valuable helpers.

Mrs. T. J. Callahan ane daughter Winifred, of Ft. Wayne, are guests in the family of Supt. Merica. Mrs. Callahan will be remembered as Maggie Dolan, a teacher at Garrett. Mr. Callahan was in the B & O. offices there, and is now chief dispatcher for the Nickel Plate road.

Mr. and Mrs. Swineford have been up to Mt. Clemens, Mich., two or three weeks, but are at home now. Mr. Swineford took treatment at the famed mineral springs there during his stay, and though she thinks it beneficial he says there are only certain complaints that are fully cured by it.

Mrs. Ehlers, now at Raleigh, North Corolina, writes to friends here, that snow is a foot deep there, and the mercury has been down to zero. For pains in the chest there is nothing better than a flannel cloth saturated with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It will produce a counter irritation without blistering, and is not so disagreeable as mustard; in fact is much superior to any plaster on account of its pain-relieving qualities. If used in time it will prevent pneumonia. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Isaac Lavene informs us that his loss by the fire will exceed the amount of insurance by about $250. He carried $345 insurance on team, wagons, four sets of harness, hay, feed, tools blankets, etc. He will fit up again and go right on with the business as before. He seems to be an industrious and worthy man, and we hope he may make up his loss. Mr. Thomas had $100 insurance on barn, which with its contents, was of course worth much more.

Hon. R. M. Lockhart of Waterloo and his nephew Robert Lockhart were here Monday. Mr. Lockhart was on his way to Indianapolis to attend the meeting of the state board of Agriculture. He also expects to attend the Farmers' Institute in Ft. Wayne next week. He is taking a good deal of interest in road making just now and will give them a talk on that subject. He believes every township should control its own road improvements, through its trustees and that the first step to get better roads should be to secure better drainage and get rid of the surplus water. We cannot make gravel roads in the mud and water.

Mr. Harding, one of the most active of the people's party men, has been circulating a petition to the legislature, against any road improvement law that will add to the taxes. It is not likely the legislature will add to the burdens of the people, but something will likely be done to make our road work more effective. But even if it should cost a little more, we surely need better roads.

Court.

The work of all kinds is going on again. A good deal of attention has been gived to criminal matters. The boys who were arrested for burglary have been called up. Clyde Myers is sent up one year and Wm. Mixon for 18 months. The others are not done with, and some are out on bail. Holderbaum gets a short term in jail and disfranchised two years. The case against Norman Smith goes over to next term. The case against Whetsel for stabbing Treesh at Sedan, was dropped, as papers were not right. Don't know whether it will come up again or not. Much work in other cases has been done, much of which the public would not probably care for.

The Keeley Cure.

Parties have been looking for a suitable location for a Keeley Cure establishment, and Auburn now has an easy possibility to secure it. Dr. Maddox, of Cincinnati one of five men, who own the right for Indiana, and Mr. Putt, till lately foreman of the great Akron Tile Works, have been at Ft. Wayne a week or so, looking over that and the surrounding towns. They have also made two trips here, and Auburn suits them best of any place they have seen though Ft. Wayne makes them much better financial offers. W. D. Rickel, C. C. Shaffer, Mr. Hollister, Mr. Glazier, H. E. Trout and others have been actice in aiding the matter, believeing it would not only be a good thing from a moral point of view, but would also be a great financial aid to the town. An establishment like this would call in a great many strangers, several hundreds each year, and each would leave money in the town. They would go back to their homes cured and their memories of Auburn would be pleasant. They would refer to our town enthusiastically, and that would be the most valuable advertisement we could have. Auburn would be known far and near. Our citizens would of course (for they always do,) treat these strangers with their usual friendliness, and they would go out from among us with a good impression as to both town and people. Auburn would be remembered as a lovely and home like place, where they had passed a few weeks pleasantly. A valuable institution would be added to Auburn's already varied interests. Let us secure it at once. Clinch the matter without delay. They prefer Auburn to Ft. Wayne, and they ask but little, They wish us to furnish them five patients to begin with and to guarantee pay for treating them. The price for curing an inebriate is $100. This would mean a guarantee of $500. Surely we can raise this, and it will be a lasting blessing to five men, who will be cured of the drink habit. Let every citizen be liberal in a good cause, and we shall succeed. The matter stands between Ft. Wayne and Auburn and will be settled this week.

It is intended especially for colds, croup and whooping cough." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS
$1.00 Per Dozen Next Week Only.

The New York Photo. Service, 216 Calhoun St., Ft. Wayne, will open a branch gallery in the Gandy Block in Auburn, corner 7th and Cedar Sts. on Monday, January 9.

During the entire week they will make their very best grade of Cabinet Photos, at the popular price of $1 per dozen. This firm has been doing an immense business during the past four months in Ft. Wayne, at these prices and come to Auburn by invitation of many patrons that find it inconvenient to visit the Ft. Wayne gallery. They are perfectly responsible in every way and present letters of introduction from H. C. Frank, city marshal of Ft. Wayne, as to their reliability and method of conducting business.

Call and see their samples and work next week and sit for your photos. Proofs are shown, and absolute satisfaction is assured. Remember they only stay here one week from January 9, and all work is guaranteed equal to any costing $5 per dozen.

AN American picture dealer has engaged to pay $60,000 for Rosa Bonheur's latest work, "Horses Threshing Corn."

EVERY man, so long as his passions do not obscure his reason, will always be the more indulgent in proportion as he is enlightened.

IT is safe to say that the young Goulds and their successors won't have half as much fun in spending that big fortune as the old man had in the making of it.

VERMONTERS have some reasons to be happy not generally enjoyed in this latitude. Her Legislature has already finished its biennial session of forty-seven days and gone home.

THE wife of President Diaz, of Mexico, will send a full band of forty-five female musicians to the Chicago Exposition. The lady artist on the big drum will be sure to secure a beat.

THE ease with which a crisis can be precipitated in France is remarkable. The wonder is not that there should be a fresh crisis so often, but that the air is not filled with flying crises all the time.

TASKS children must learn, duties they must be taught; but those who know how to interest the developing mind and to feed it wisely and well with the elements of knowledge can make education one of childhood's desirable pleasures.

NEARLY everything mean has been said about Mr. Gould since his death that the editor and the preacher could invent. There is one accusation that none can bring against him. He was not a hypocrite. He leaves not a mill for charity.

QUAIL love potato bugs as an article of food. One of these birds was recently opened which had one hundred and one of these farmers' pests concealed in its crop. It will pay the average potato grower to have a flock of trained quail among his other live stock.

ROBBED on Tuesday, tried on Wednesday, sentenced on Thursday—to ten years in the penitentiary. This is the record in an Eastern State. That is the way to mete out punishment to criminals, as a preventive. Smart lawyers and long trials, after many postponements, are the things that encourage criminals of all classes.

A LAKE MICHIGAN captain being wrecked close to Chicago squatted in the stranded hulk and waited for the shore and city to grow, out to him. This they have done and the captain is rich. He belongs to that class of men so rare that practical people believe them mythical, who falling into the water would be rescued dry and with a fish in each pocket.

THE people of Maine were evidently in earnest when they adopted a constitutional amendment requiring the voters of that State to be able to read and write. Since the amendment was adopted there has been a startling increase in the attendance at the night schools of the State, and the pupils declare that they are fitting themselves to exercise the elective franchise.

LIEUTENANT PEARY wants to make another arctic expedition, and he is not asking anybody to contribute the means. He proposes to lecture and earn enough money to pay for his outfit. This is a novel way to set about such an enterprise, and a very good one, for it silences all carping criticism. If the Lieutenant wants to look for the north pole and pay his own bills it is nobody's affair but his own.

WHEN a pugilist meets defeat the manner in which his friends flock to the other fellow has been cited often as an illustration of human selfishness. However, the fistic Mr. Hogan recently was beaten all over the ring at Cincinnati, being finally knocked out of it, and yet he was married the next day while he still looked like an animated bruise. It is a pleasure to record such another instance of woman's unshaken devotion.

AN Indiana man, exultant in his his own strength, made wager that he could with his two good hands pull the tail from a horse. The attempt was made, but the tail is still in its natural place. The horse not being human failed to enter fully into the spirit of the occasion, but he did what he could, for he fell upon the man and broke that worthy person's leg, by some oversight on the part of justice failing to break his neck instead.

IT is impossible to account for the prevailing fashion in draught vehicles in regard to the wheels and the mode of fitting them in the front, unless it is to economize space. The use of wide tires on the wheels would save millions of dollars in the wear of vehicles and the maintenance of roads every year. It would, no doubt, be an improvement to have the turn easier by cutting into the sides of the box; but it is impracticable to use very small wheels at the front that would turn under the body of a carriage. Any one may have a carriage or wagon made to suit his own ideas, and any apparent improvement would, no doubt, soon be adopted and become the fashion, as broad tires are very fast.

TEXAS hailstones deposited by a late storm are said to have weighed two pounds, and to have pelted their way six inches into the mellow bosom of the Lone Star State. The story seems large, but if stones of this size were afloat above Texas, nothing could be more readily believed than that they would come down. Perhaps the rain-makers with their balloon bombs jarred some hunks off an aerial iceberg. These theories are advanced, not as absolute but as an honest effort to shield Texas against accusations of deviating from the cold truth.

DETECTIVES laden with dynamite are said to be intent upon using it to blow Evans and Sontag, the California bandits, out of some sylvan retreat into the publicity that the two have shunned with a fixity of purpose almost admirable. Evans and Sontag, hard men though they be, would doubtless be susceptible to the action of dynamite could the necessary proximity be acquired. The difficulty appears in their probable reluctance to remain in a passive attitude towards the gentlemen whose duty it shall be to place a bomb under them and light the fuse.

FOUR men were hanged on the same scaffold at Louisville the other day. One of the quartette, Mr. McCarthy, was observed just as the Sheriff was adjusting his noose, to yawn in a manner indicative of extreme ennui. Mr. McCarthy must have been unusually constituted. Probably burning at the stake would have aroused his passing interest. Still he should not have yawned. A decent respect for the feelings of his companions, who really seemed to be concerned, should have forbidden it. Furthermore the trapdoors yawned sufficiently soon after to meet all the exigencies of the occasion.

WHETHER or not the German War Minister meant to create a dread in in Europe, when he made his speech supporting the military bill, he certainly has done so. Germany has been so persistently non-alarmist for the past twenty years, and has shown such good faith in keeping her promises of peace, that when she professes to see war imminent, everybody is startled. The capitalist, the manufacturer, the banker, all begin to take their precautions. It has long been thought that '93 was the year when the great clash of arms would occur, as nearly all the armaments of the great nations likely to fight will be completed then.

A "GHOST" in St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee, turns out to be a 16-year-old lad who is passionately fond of music, and who stole into the church nights to play on the organ. He had been denied the use of an instrument at home, as his father wished him to devote more time to other studies. The incident is interesting in that it illustrates the tendency of parents to restrain children in the pursuit of these branches for which nature has intended them, and to push them in studies for which they have no adaptation. This evening-up process is very unwise. Trying to keep a child from learning what he thirsts to know is as useless as to attempt to keep the sun from shining. He will be hindered for a while, but not effectually repressed. It is pleasing to know that the Milwaukee ghost is now to have an organ of his own.

THE owl is one of the most useful of our feathered friends. He is ready for something to eat just about the time when mice and other little creatures come out to get their supper in the gardens and fields. By destroying numbers of these pests he does great good, and deserves a better fate than to be killed and nailed up on a barn door. Woodpeckers are among our most useful servants. Every one kills thousands of insects in the summer, digging them out of the bark and wood. If they were to stop work many fruits and shade trees would die. Yet because they cut holes in the bark, which scientific men say does not injure the trees, farmers give the birds a bad name and kill them whenever they can. The more people find out what they really eat the better they know that birds are almost always the best helpers farmers and gardeners can have. They do, to be sure, sometimes eat fruit, but they have paid for every bit a dozen times over in the insects destroyed.

Gold Thread.

The base of the gold thread of commerce is silver, which is brought from the Bank of England in cakes weighing about one thousand ounces. Gold leaf is carefully incorporated with the silver by hammering, and afterward the whole is subjected to a charcoal fire. The bar is now ready for conversion into wire. This is accomplished by drawing it from one hundred to one hundred and fifty times through ever diminishing holes in steel plates, and finally, when the capabilities of this metal have been exhausted, through apertures in diamonds, rubies or sapphires. The delicate wire thus obtained must now be passed through the steel rollers of one of Herr Krupp's little flatting mills. This brings us to the final process—the spinning of the flattened wire round silk, to form the golden thread of commerce. These spinning machines are worked by water, although two steam engines are to be found in the factory; for water power is considered to be more regular and even in its action.

WILL CONTINUE WORK.

WAR ON THE TARIFFITES TO GO MERRILY ON.

The Reform Club Decides that There Will Be No Cessation of Hostilities—Lines of the Chicago Platform to Be Followed Out.

President E. Ellery Anderson, of the Reform Club of New York, has just presented his report at the annual meeting of that organization. Mr. Anderson discusses the silver question, the anti-snapper movement in New York, the reasons for the opposition to D. B. Hill, the tariff, and the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland.

The club spent during the year over $44,000 in tariff reform work. Of this amount $39,900 was supplied from individual subscription and $4,000 from dues of non-resident members. Mr. Anderson says:

"This work was carried on continuously, through speakers and lecturers, through the constant distribution of tariff reform articles, which, through the Western Press agencies, appeared in over two thousand newspapers and reached a very large number of readers, and through the instrumentality of its own publication—Tariff Reform.

"Your committee," he adds, "feels that a great step in advance has been taken, and that in the battle that has been fought for principle in 1892 the Reform Club has held the right of the line, and has contributed its full share to the result which has been achieved.

"Much, however, remains to be done. On some of the principles involved there is substantial accord. Free wool, free metal ores, free lumber, free coal and free salt commend themselves to all tariff reformers. We all agree that duties which serve as bulwarks for trusts and monoplies, such as the 50 cents per hundredweight on refined sugar, while the raw material used by the refiners is on the free list, should be repealed.

"It would seem to be absolutely necessary to impose taxes upon very many articles with a view to obtaining the highest possible amount of revenue from them, which we would gladly see taxed much less if there were less need for revenue. It is probable that no adjustment of tariff rates upon articles now dutiable, whether high or low, could produce a sufficient increase of revenue to meet the necessities of the Federal Government during the next three or four years. In view of this difficulty several different solutions have been proposed. It has been suggested that the tax on whisky should be increased. If such an increased tax could be fully collected, and if it could be made to apply to all whisky in bond at the time of the passage of the act, a large additional revenue might be obtained from this source; but all the experience of the past shows that very high taxes upon whisky cannot be thoroughly collected, and that they open the way to enormous frauds. We cannot afford to run the risk of such shameful scenes as were common during and shortly after the last war.

"It has been proposed in some quarters to tax raw sugar, tea, and coffee, which are untaxed by the existing tariff. But to this many earnest tariff reformers are opposed, as a step away from free trade, rather than toward it; while they agree that free trade, though it may yet be long distant, is a consummation desirable to be attained.

"The only alternative in the way of actual taxation which remains appears to be an income tax, which again meets great opposition on account of the gross frauds upon the revenue which have always abounded under every income tax, especially in this country. The only remaining alternative, so far as we are aware, is the issue of deficit bonds to an amount sufficient to cover the deficiency which has been caused by the wanton and corrupting extravagance of the present administration. To this, of course, there are serious objections not necessary to be dwelt upon.

"Upon one point the opinions of the committee are unanimous. Whether the reform of the tariff results in increasing or decreasing the Government revenue, it ought to and must succeed, without delay or evasion, upon the lines prescribed by the Chicago platform of 1892. Every increase of taxes made by the McKinley law must be absolutely repealed. All raw materials must be admitted free of duty and all partially finished materials for manufacture must be admitted at very low rates of duty. No duties must in any case be retained at a rate higher than that which will produce the largest revenue to the Government and the least revenue to protected individuals. The promises made to the people, which they have believed and upon the strength of which they have restored Grover Cleveland to national leadership, must be fulfilled to the last letter without the smallest unnecessary delay.

"Many ingenious efforts will be made to obstruct the work of tariff reform. And even after such reform is secured by favorable legislation the American people will need to be constantly educated, year after year, as to the importance of maintaining that which has been achieved and of going forward in the same direction. It is, therefore, the purpose of your committee to conduct an intelligent discussion on the subject of proposed legislation affecting our system of taxation. We propose to conduct this discussion by means of our periodical issues of 'Tariff Reform' and by regular contributions to the press. We shall also endeavor, if the opportunity is afforded us, to conduct a series of lectures in which the subject matter of correct taxation will be fully presented to the people from time to time. The field is ample, and we promise to return full measure for such co-operation as we may from time to time receive from our subscribers, from the members, resident and non-resident of our club, and from those who desire to see the principles settled at the late election enacted into the permanent laws of our country."

The Other Side.

President Harrison, in his last message, calls attention to the great increase in wealth among manufacturers since 1880. No doubt the President states the facts correctly, otherwise he would have to confess that the protective tariff failed to accomplish its avowed object—the enrichment of the American manufacturers.

But a glance at the farm statistics of the United States would reveal a very different picture. For instance, statistics published by the Ohio Farmer show the average value of land in Ohio per acre in 1880 was $27.00; average value per acre 1890, $22.08; decrease value per acre 1890 of $4.92. Aggregate value of real estate in 1890, as equalized by board, $2,140,135,496; in 1880, as equalized by board, $1,097,509,830; increase over 1880, $42,625,666. Value of farm lands 1880, $684,826,516; value of farm lands 1890, $566,361,909; decrease from 1880, $115,564,607. Value of real estate in towns and cities in 1880, $412,583,314; value in 1890 $570,773,587; increase over 1880, $158,090,273. The total increase of real property in Ohio in 1890 over 1880, as equalized by the State Board in both years, amounted to a fraction less than 4 per cent. This increase remains as a balance of the increase of towns and cities, after canceling the appalling loss on farm lands. On farm lands the loss aggregates about 15 per cent. in the decade, while the towns and cities gain a fraction over 38 per cent.

The St. Louis Republic shows that, "while the farmers of the South have suffered a loss of $180,000,000 on their cotton crop, the farmers of the West have suffered a loss of $168,000,000 on their wheat crop and $240,000,000 on their corn crop—and the aggregate losses on these three staples alone amount to $558,000,000."

Verily this picture is not so pleasing viewed from the side of the unprotected farmer as from that of the protected manufacturer.—Oakland County Post.

Strong Spinal Columns Needed.

Set it down that a Democrat who wants tariff reform postponed is not a true Democrat. He may vote for its candidates, but he is treacherous to the party's principles and hostile to its spirit.

The party did not make Grover Cleveland its candidate and declare Republican protection to be a fraud with a purpose to delude and betray the people.

It did not adopt tariff reform as a cry merely to enable it to get possession of the offices. It adopted it as a principle and a faith and pledged itself, if intrusted with power, to reconstruct the tariff so as to relieve the people of unnecessary taxation.

The party cannot delay entering vigorously upon that work without exciting distrust and contempt. The people whom we have educated to renounce the policy of Republican protection and to depose its instruments cannot be fooled. They demand action. And so do Democrats who are Democrats in very truth.

Nothing else is honorable. Nothing less is possible if the party would not be humiliated. We must show that we have the courage of our principles. We must respect our pledges. We must act boldly and promptly. Timidity and dalliance will be fatal.

Pluck in defiance has won us a great opportunity. Pluck in using the opportunity will win the admiration and the full confidence of the nation.—New York World.

Want Freedom and an Extra Session.

There is no mistaking the spirit and intent of these resolutions, recently adopted at Chicago:

"The Trade and Labor Assembly of Chicago, a delegated body representing the organized artisans and mechanics of this city, desires to support the call made by various journals and citizens for an extra session for the repeal of the McKinley law. The verdict of the people at the last election was emphatic and overwhelming against the further continuance of a national policy that restricts and preys on the consumer.

We therefore, as the representatives of organized labor in Chicago, declare to you with all the solemnity of serious men and women, that, inasmuch as the only protction we secure as industrial units comes by virtue of our own organizations and the degree of intelligence and fraternity we cultivate among ourselves—we therefore request that this legal and arbitrary protection be unqualifiedly repealed. As workers, we have no fear of our European fellow-workers.

"We therefore ask you to aid in hastening the time when free trade, carried on by free men, will be the ruling policy of our nation."

Labor Needs Only Fair Play.

Labor in the United States, as in every other country, has been plundered and humiliated by an abuse of the taxing function. Workingmen need no more laws to protect them in their rights; no more legislation intended to compel a generous division of the money extorted from consumers. All that they need and should demand is the immediate and unconditional repeal of the laws which support and make their robbery possible. It is high time that members of labor organizations rid their minds of the protection superstition that the distribution of wealth among its producers can be regulated by statutory law. Wealth would flow in abundance and in equitable measure to each of its makers, whether earned by hand or brain, if the taxing power of government were not prostituted for selfish ends.

The law of the distribution of products is a natural one and, when unimpeded by stupid legislation, will do its work perfectly and beneficently. Acts of Congress in such a case are as impertinent and mischievous as they would be directed at the regulation of a person's digestion. It is this broad principle of individual sovereignty—a principle that is cardinal in America's constitution and in Democratic faith—that members of labor unions must comprehend and be guided by if they would conquer their oppressors and establish justice in the land.—Chicago Herald.

More Revenue with Less Duty.

Those commentators on the tariff who insist that a reduction of duties would be equivalent to a reduction of revenue betray ignorance of the subject. It would be quite possible to increase revenue by reducing duties, and to reduce revenue by increasing duties. Many of the present protective duties are so high as to be prohibitory. To bring these duties down to a point where importation would be profitable would result in increased revenue. There could be nothing simpler than the details of a revenue tariff. It is only when tariffs are so arranged that the duties are no longer collected at the custom houses but at the warehouses and factories of favored persons, corporations, and trusts, that the matter becomes complicated.—Philadelphia Record.

High Tariff—Tried and Found Guilty.

Mr. Harrison hardly does justice to the aims and purposes of the people who have asked him to give way to what they believe to be a better national policy. The theory of protection had a full generation in which to show what it can do. At the end of that time the merchants and artisans deliberately declared that the results did not equal their expectations, and that the promises made by the protection leaders failed of fulfillment. There was no other issue of any serious importance in the campaign. The voters gave themselves to a consideration of this question: "Now that you see what protection can do, and what it cannot do, are you satisfied with it and will you have it continued?" That question was debated long and exhaustively, and on the first Tuesday of November it was put in the convention of the whole people. It was overwhelmingly decided against President Harrison and against his party. And it was thus decided, not for any reasons personal to the President, but because the great bulk of the nation believe that a lower tariff will give them more business, a larger market, more steady work, and better wages. We are a work-a-day community from Atlantic to Pacific, and we want all that our circumstances, our enviable position, and the peculiarity of our institutions are capable of affording us. If we can get on in spite of a high tariff, cannot we get on better without it? That was the backbone of the contention, and as the judgment of the people is final in this matter, the one party stepped to the rear and the other party came to the front. We seek prosperity, and we seek all the prosperity within reach. We are all alike in that mattet and there is no division of opinion on the subject. Give us mills that will turn all the year round; give us a market that will accept all we can produce; give us living wages and steady employment. These are our one ambi ion and we care more for them than for party organization. Therefore, if the majority believe that a radical revision of the McKinley bill will give us these things, then let that bill be revised. That is the whole story and all there is to it.—New York Herald (Independent).

Iron Business Booming.

We commend to the "prophets of ruin" the interesting collection of exact information about the iron industry of Pennsylvania and Ohio which we publish elsewhere in a letter from Pittsburg. It is a gloomy tale if they approach it from the point of view of their predictions, but an exceeding cheering one if they approach it from the opposite direction. It shows no "ruin" anywhere, but increased activity in mills already in operation, purchases of new property with a view to enlarged facilities and the employment of more labor by many establishments, the reopening of mills which have for a long time been idle, and the building of entirely new plants employing many thousands of new hands. All this information is specific and exact, and is set forth with a fullness of names and localities, amounts of capital, and numbers of laborers which makes it very different reading from the "ruin" intelligence which is put forth from time to time in the Republican press. The latter, like the erstwhile news about the American tin works, is always very general, and the persons who are responsible for it are never able to get down to particulars.—N. Y. Evening Post.

That Sheltering Umbrella.

Nothing funnier has appeared since the election than President Harrison's remark that "protection has failed because the wage-earner has refused to share his shelter with the manufacturer; he would not even walk under the same umbrella."

Considering that the operatives in the protected industries do not constitute more than one-twentieth of the working population, the assumption that their action decided the election is quite amusing in itself. But when the mind pictures the strikers at Homestead, nine-tenths of whom were paid less than $2 a day, "refusing to share their shelter" with Andrew Carnegie, who had pulled out more than $1,000,000 a year in profits, the comicality suggests its own cartoon.

Mr. Harrison perhaps failed to notice the fact that $1,250,000 was contributed to his campaign fund by the protected millionaires of Pennsylvania alone to preserve the tariff which they had paid for and made.

Does the President really think this payment was pure philanthropy, to enable the paternal plutocrats to hold an umbrella over the wage-earners?—New York World.

The Sleeper's Answer.

There is a choice recipe in which the owl figures "to make any one that sleepeth answer to whatsoever thou ask" given in "Physick for the Poor," published in London in 1657, says "All the Year Round." It says you are to "take the heart of an owl and his left leg and put that upon the breast of one that sleepeth, and they shall reveal whatsoever thou shalt ask them." The Hindus, however, declare that the flesh and blood of owl will make a person insane who eats or drinks it. On this account men who are devoured by jealousy of a rival or hatred of an enemy come furtively to the market and purchase an owl. In silence they carry it home and secretly prepare a decoction, which an accomplice will put into the food or drink of the object of their malignant designs.

To Insure Red Cheeks.

Young ladies of Germany have a superstition that if they bury a drop of their blood under a rosebush it will ever after insure the experimenter a pair of rosy cheeks.

A WOOD-CHOPPER at Redding, Cal., shot a stranger because he was putting on too much style. The wounded stranger was lately from Red Bluff.

Two Rich Men.

Gould and Armour.

Here are two examples of two rich men, both of whom were the architects of their own fortunes.

Gould dies of consumption brought about by taking cold and neglecting himself.

No doubt this malady was aggravated by the nervous strain under which he worked.

Armor gets up every morning at 6 o'clock, works all day and finds time to give the city of his adoption a million and a half of dollars.

When Gould died no one had a good word to say of him except that he did once send the fever sufferers of the South a few dollars from his ample store.

Armour lives and every one applauds his action.

When you get rich emulate Armour, and not Gould.

But live as long as you can.

When you take cold get a bottle of REID'S GERMAN COUGH & KIDNEY CURE and take it freely.

It is the best thing in the world for all maladies that affect the pulmon organs.

NATURAL GAS.

A Brief History of the Rise and Fall of This Fuel.

The history of the rise of natural gas for manufacturing purposes in Pittsburg is an interesting one, says the Chronicle-Telegraph of that city.

It was about the middle of May, 1884, when it displaced coal in the first iron mill in this city. The first of that month it was used for the first time in an extensive industrial works, in the O'Hara glass house at Thirtieth street and the Allegheny Valley Railroad. About the fifteenth of the month it took the place of 6,000 bushels of coal in the Carnegie mill at Twenty-ninth street. Not until early in November was it introduced in the mill of this firm at Thirty-third street, where it took the place of 7,000 bushels of coal daily.

While the use of natural gas was very satisfactory, the slowness attending its introduction was remarkable. It was about the middle of the summer of 1885 before it was used in half of the iron and steel works in the Pittsburg district, and it was fully three years before it took the place of coal in all of them.

There was considerable trouble in securing manufacturers to make the change. The low rate offered to the firms was not so much of an object as the room saved by absence of ashes.

There was no trouble in reconstructing the furnaces from coal to the use of natural gas, yet this retarded its early use somewhat.

Among the first along the Monongahela River to adopt it was Jones & Laughlins, in the winter of 1884, in the American Iron Works. To guard themselves against possible trouble they only remodeled a portion of their works. About six months after it was used with satisfaction in these works it was used in all the mills along this river and the Ohio, excepting in those of the Oliver Iron Company.

Beginning with 1889, the gradual abandonment of natural gas in the local mills where natural gas is still being used in puddling furnaces are those of A. M. Byers & Co., Zug & Co., Brown & Co., and the Carnegie mill at Thirty-third street. These four mills run 162 furnaces of this kind, besides the heating furnaces and the tube works of the firm first named. There are few mills in which gas is still used in the heating furnaces, but altogether it has already given away to fully 200,000 bushels of coal daily.

The idea that the supply of natural gas would never be exhausted was only entertained for about a year—from 1887 to 1888. After that there were many evidences that the supply would not hold out. During this year there were some firms who became imbued with the idea that all they had to do was to dig a well anywhere and they could soon get enough gas to supply them. There wery few accidents in any of the mills caused by gas.

The Black Swallower.

What a terrible, horrible animal a tiger would be were it able to swallow from eight to twelve times its own bulk! It seems impossible that there can be any creature able to do this, and yet, far down in the depths of the southern seas, there lives a fish known as the black swallower, which can swallow whole a fish eight to twelve times larger than itself.

Happily for the other inhabitants of the sea the black swallower is rare, there being but three known specimens in the museums of the world. In appearance it is a slender, elongated fish of uniform thickness, from eight inches to a foot in length. The skin is without scales, the head somewhat cone-shaped, narrowing forward.

Its fins end in spines, thus preventing it from becoming a dainty morsel for other fishes. The mouth is that of a monster; it is very deeply cleft, extending behind the eyes, and armed with many long, sharp-pointed and moveable teeth. Such is its appearance with an empty stomach.

Going about in search of food it espies another fish many times larger than itself. It darts upon this fish from behind, seizes the tail, and gradually crawls over the struggling victim with its jaws, using first one and then the other. As the captive is taken in, the stomach and integments stretch out, until at last the entire fish is passed through the mouth into the stomach.

Then the distended organ appears as a great bag, projecting out far backward and far forward. Over this horrible bag, and resting on it, the swallower seems to lie; the lower fins appear dislocated and lie far away from their usual position.

The walls of the stomach have been so stretched that they are transparent, and the species of fish within can be discerned. Sometimes, three times at least, such rapidity is more than the captor can stand. The fish within the stomach begins to decompose and gas is created. The black swallower is forced over on its back, when the imprisoned gas, as in a balloon, takes it upward from the depths to the surface of the sea. Thus have the three specimens been found floating on the surface, thousands of fathoms above their true haunts. In each instance the fish in the stomach has been about twice as long as the swallower, and from six to twelve times bulkier.

Pleasure.

Society is not, and ought not be, exclusively devoted to serious concerns. The beneficent Creator of the universe would not have adapted human beings to the enjoyment of his gifts unless he intended that they should be enjoyed. With the law which enjoins industry comes the law of fruition. Why should the eye be formed to perceive natural and artificial beauty if it is not to be used for that purpose?

Why has the capacity to make instruments capable of emitting sweet sounds been given if such sounds are not to be heard? Why should the human structure be capable of the sweetest melody, and of graceful action, and of the delightful expression beaming from innocent and heavenly countenances, if pleasures from such sources were forbidden us? Why does the grape ripen, the silkworm toil, the annual fleece return, the diamond sparkle, the marble yield to the chisel, and the canvas catch and preserve the inspiration of genius, but to waken human desire, animate industry, and reward with fruition? It is the excess and the abuse which are forbidden.

Improvement in Machinery.

The wonderful advance that has been made during the last third of a century in the construction of machinery, and particularly in the equipment of ships with propelling power, is well illustrated by comparisons presented by an Eastern journal. It is well known that the Great Eastern, that wonderful leviathan of the seas which was the talk of the world some thirty years ago, was in all practical respects a complete failure. The reason for this will be understood when it is stated that engines of only 7,650 horse power were provided to propel a ship 680 feet in length and 82 feet in breadth. In those days engines of such power were considered very remarkable, and it does not appear to have been suspected at the time that the failure of the great ship was due to a lack of sufficient power to drive her vast bulk through the water and render her manageable.

She was abandoned and allowed to go to ruin because it was believed that the limit of size had in her case been exceeded. But when we compare her 7,650 horse power with the 20,605 horse power of that modern greyhound, the City of Paris, a vessel 120 feet shorter and nearly 20 feet narrower than the Great Eastern, it is plainly seen where the trouble lay. Such an equipment of machinery as the great steamships of our day carry would have been entirely beyond the comprehension of the engine-builders of thirty years ago.

But after all it appears that we are only just beginning to develop the possibilities of the steam engine, and that there are no longer any limitations as to the dimensions that may be chosen for steamships. The Campania, just launched from an English shipyard, is 620 feet in length, or only sixty feet shorter than the Great Eastern, and is equipped with engines of 30,000 horse power. The propelling force which these figures indicate is almost inconceivable.

The new American steamships now building for the transatlantic business will be smaller than the Campania, but larger than any of the other liners now afloat. They will be provided with engines proportionately powerful and representing the highest modern skill.

A Brilliant Thought.

There may be more ways than one to kill a cat, but I learned of a novel way to protect that animal from the mischievous youngster the other day.

It happened that I was stopping at a summer boarding house up in the Catskills for a few days where an old maid boarder had located herself and her three cats for the season. The children in the house, from the youngest to the oldest, had led the three cats such a dance that the felines were justified in wishing during their waking moments that they were dead.

It had kept the old lady on the jump to keep her cats out of the children's hands during the day and to protect them at night they had to be locked up in her room. Thus stood affairs until a few weeks ago the old lady happened to think of a scheme whereby her own and her pets' troubles would be ended. She organized a juvenile society for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

It was a thought that entered her head at 1 o'clock in the morning as she lay awake trying to devise a method to relieve the cats of trouble. The next morning every child in the boarding house was coralled in the old lady's room, and she instilled into the young hearts love for everything that walked, flew or crawled, including babies.

The children, little comprehending the sport they were sacrificing, or the deep motive of the old lady, all took a pledge to live up to her teachings, and not only this but to get every new boarder's children to join the society, too. For fear the novelty would wear off and the children would forget their pledge, the old lady sent to the city and obtained little badges for the children to wear.

The result is that all the children in the house strut about like minature policeman; the cats are recovering their composure, besides patches of new fur, and the old lady can do her knitting without fear of being disturbed to rescue her pets from all but sudden death.—New York Herald.

Clad in Costly Fur.

John the Baptist, with his raiment of skins would have been of little interest on Fifth avenue Thursday afternoon compared with a promenader clad in Persian lamb, says the New York Evening Sun. Her garment consisted of a bell skirt of tender young astrakhan, missing nothing of a fashionable cut, and a Spanish jacket. This was short over a skirt of shaded green velvet of a lettuce-like tint, so light it was, a girdle fastening with large flaps in the back, and large velvet sleeves. This costume was crowned by a black hat in velvet and violets. There was no man or boy on the street so ignorant of feminine gear that this costume did not catch his eye. To look at it women almost brought the procession to a halt.

"Boy Wanted Inside."

Cheap Enough.

A Mexican street car can be hired for personal use for $3.50 a day, with a right to stop at any place for two hours.

Sharpening Knives.

The itinerant knife-sharpener is not a good man to trust with a finely tempered or really good knife. His father used to carry round a good suppy of water, and with this he kept his wheel wet, so that it could not possibly heat or destroy the temper of the knife. That this is necessary can be testified to by anyone who has tried to sharpen a knife on a stone without either water or oil to moisten it; and the farmer would never dream of rubbing his scythe with a dry whetstone. But the modern itinerant knife-sharpener does not use water at all. He sharpens the knife on the dry stone and by means of a little rubbing he gets a feather edge which has every appearance of sharpness, but which breaks off the first time the knife is used, leaving a ragged edge much worse than before the muddler took hold of it. To sharpen a knife properly it is necessary to keep the stone wet all the time, and any arguments to the contrary are the result of a desire to save trouble and time.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Man Recreated Many Times in Life.

It is surprising how many people believe that the entire body of a man is renewed every seven years exactly. This used to be taught in books, and, although not orthodox now, is still accepted as gospel by many. To show its inaccuracy one has only to hit a nail on his finger hard enough, for in that case the injured object will come off and be replaced by an entirely new nail. If this process occupied seven years such an accident would be a very tiresome affair; but as any mechanic will tell you, it only occupies a few weeks. The growth is more rapid in summer than winter, but never taking more than four months. So far as the nails are concerned, then, the renewal process is repeated about twenty-one times during the regulation seven years, and the theory is thus destroyed, even if no other proofs of its falsity were forthcoming.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Enemy Baffled.

There is an enemy with whom thousands are familiar all their lives, because they are born with a tendency to biliousness. With this enemy they are constantly battling with ineffectual weapons. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will baffle it. Mere purgatives will not reform a disordered condition of the liver indicated, not by constipation alone, but also by sick headaches, yellowness of the skin and eyeballs, nausea, furred tongue and uneasiness, more particularly upon pressure on the right side, upon and below the short ribs. Avoid drastic purgatives which gripe and weaken the intestines, and substitute this world-famous anti-billions cordial, which likewise removes malarial, stomachic and kidney complaints, rheumatism and nervousness. As a laxative of the bowels, painless but effectual, it improves appetite, sleep and the ability to digest, and possesses the additional advantage of a standard tonic.

A Hard One to Answer.

The long-haired caller in the editorial room was indignant.

"Poets are born, sir," he said to the eminently practical editor.

"Of course they are," responded the editor, suavely, "you didn't imagine I thought they were hatched, did you?"

"I mean, sir, they are born; born, sir. Do you understand?"

"I think I do," and the editor rubbed his chin reflectively, "but why are they?"

That was the straw that fractured the spinal column of the camel and the poet stalked out of the den.—Free Press.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Royal Baking Powder

Strongest, Purest, Most Economical.

As to whether any of the baking powders are equal to the "Royal," the official tests clearly determine. When samples of various baking powders were purchased from the grocers, and analyzed by the United States Government Chemists and the Chemists of State and City Boards of Health, the reports revealed the fact that the "Royal" contained from 28 per cent. to 60 per cent. more leavening strength than the others, and also that it was more perfectly combined, absolutely pure, and altogether wholesome.

As most of these powders are sold to consumers at the same price as the "Royal," by the use of the Royal Baking Powder there is an average saving of over one third, besides the advantage of assured purity and wholesomeness of food, and of bread, biscuit and cake made perfectly light, sweet, and palatable.

The official reports also reveal the presence, in other powders, of alum, lime or sulphuric acid, by which their use is made a matter of grave danger to the consumer.

Whenever a baking powder is sold at a lower price than the "Royal," or with a gift, it is a certain indication that it is made from alum, and is to be avoided under all circumstances.

Partiality.

The Bible seems to be full of strangely pat local allusions, and so pointed are they that even the truly reverent person cannot always avoid calling attention to them.

Near Cheltenham, England, is a small village named Chosen, and there one Sunday in the little church preached a new vicar. Possibly in innocence, or it may be to please the good village folk, he gave out as his text the words:

"And make all thy chosen people joyful."

Before he had time to begin his sermon proper, however, a yeoman from a distant parish broke out, to the consternation of the clergyman and the amusement of the Chosen people themselves:

"And what about the poor Hucklecut folk?"

Preferable.

Many of the brilliant statesman of France have had the gift of terse, witty expression. It has served them when elaborate arguments would have been far less impressive.

When Turgot was minister some one enthusiastically advocated a certain method of raising money for the government.

Turgot disposed of the subject shortly and vigorously. His judgement was known to be good, and little more was heard of the tax in question after he wrote on the memorial:

"It would be safer to execute the author than the project."

Not So Bad as Siberia.

Once during a ball at the court of St. Petersburg, under Nicholas, an officer brought a grand duchess to the floor, at which her highness called him furiously a "clumsy camel."

The officer thought himself lost when the grim Czar approached him, seized him by the cuff and marched him deliberately out of the ball-room. Not a word was spoken until they reached a passage in which stood a panful of powdered chalk.

"Rub the soles of your boots into that." said the Czar, sternly.

Frank Editor.

The editor of a certain newspaner was very busy one day, with a heap of news and editorial manuscripts before him awaiting his attention, when a long-haired young man came in.

The visitor deliberately produced some papers from his inside pocket and remarked:

"Ahem! I have here a few verses—"

"Yes, yes!" exclaimed the editor. "Will you do me a favor to put them over there in that waste-basket yourself? You see I'm very busy just now!"

WATERLOO.

Mrs. Finch after spending Christmas here returned home to Chicago the following Wednesday.

Mrs. Lily Brysland was here from Ft. Wayne in attendance at the funeral of her father-in-law Josiah Brysland, Wednesday of last week.

Dell Locke and wife left Saturday for their new home and place of business in Decatur They have many friends here who regret their departure.

Last week Dr. Myers removed his family into the Ambrose Kennedy property on South Franklin street. The need of more room was the cause for the change.

The funeral of Josiah Brysland took place Wednesday of last week, at the Presbyterian church, under the direction of the Masons, of which order he was a member.

The ladies of the L. M. C. of which organization Mrs. Locke was an honored member, presented her the evening before she left, with two beautifully bound volumes of Tennyson's and George Eliot's complete poetical works. They were of the same size, bound alike, in white and gold, full of fine illustrations, each page embellished with an artistic border, the leaves of coarse, thick and satiny paper and printing fitting for such books. Mrs. L. was taken completely by surprise and fully appreciates the kindly affection that prompted the gift.

Mrs. Winslow received some days ago, a few fine specimens of silver ore from the Thespian mine at Leadville, of which Capt. George Jinks is manager and part owner. One is a Galena ore carrying lead and silver, will assay 50 ounces silver and 50 per cent lead. One is a lead carbonate ore, will assay 20 ounces silver and 20 per cent lead Another is chloride ore, very rich silver ore, carries silver and lead and will probably assay 3,000 ounces silver per ton. But the richest of all is chloride of silver, in its native state as it comes out of the mine. It is the richest of silver ore, and will run thirty thousand ounces to the ton. A little silver button looks as if while melted it had been dropped into cold water and suddenly cooled. This is a three thousand dollar assay A piece of talc or Chinese tallow is of no value, but curious as showing what is taken out from among the silver ore, and thrown aside with other debris. It is red, yellow and white and has a tallowy appearance,

The saddest event of the past week was the unexpected and sudden death, far away from home and friends, of George Kehrer, one of our best known and much esteemed business men. He came to Butler about fifteen years ago, and commenced the sale of drugs with S. G. Stone after a successful business career of about ten years. they dissolved partnership. Mr. K going out, within a year, he resumed business again in the same line across the street and has been quite successful. His health began to fail some years ago and he sought relief by short trips to Michigan and other places These failing he went to Elpaso, Texas, about two months ago, where he seemed to gain for a time, but when the cold winds of late autumn came on he commenced to decline His condition becoming more serious he sent for his wife, who started on the 26th of December, but before she reached him a telegram here announced his death which occurred last Wednesday. His wife and son Frank reached their destination last Friday and up to date of writing have not yet returned Mr. Kehrer, was a man universally respected for his business integrity, kind disposition and noble character. He was a man of even disposition and seldom if ever was so much as thrown off his guard as to express an unkind word about another He leaves a prosperous business, a wife and one son and a daughter and son both grown up.

Also $1 for one dog, $2 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog The Road and Special Road Tax are included in first installment. The Poll and Dog Tax are divided equally between the two installments.

Taxes of 1892 are due the first day of January, 1893, and may be paid in full or in two installments The first installment must be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1893, the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1893 If the first installment is not paid when due both installments become delinquent. Ten per cent shall be added and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty and charges on delinquent taxes resulting from any omission of the person paying, to state definitely on what property, in whose name, and in what township or corporation it was assessed.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once, The law is of such a character that there is no option left to the Treasurer but to enforce the collection of the delinquent taxes, however much he may regret to collect the same by sale of property.

"The owner of the property on the first day of April each year shall be liable for the taxes of that year The purchaser of property on the first day of April shall be considered the owner on that day."

Examine your receipts before leaving the office and see that all your property is included

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1893.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days. We have 6,000 receipts to make and all cannot be made in the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the 3rd Monday in April and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty

Parties sendidg by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipts will be made out for any party until they are ready to pay.

Assignees, Guardians, Administrators and other who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as individual estates, etc, are earnestly requested to settle such taxes before the last few days, as it requires considerable time to make the divisions and seperate receipts therefor As the treasurer cannot know the location of each person's property, taxpayers should designate the property on which they wish to pay taxes, and see that all property is specified on their receipts. If they have land in more than one township or town, or desire to pay taxes on lands not in their name, call the treasurer's attention to the matter.

REUBEN SAWVEL, Treasurer.

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until I began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 10 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

MESSRS. DULLAM BROS.—Gentlemen: For over 4 years I have been afflicted with an eruption of the skin, which became very troublesome and I could get no relief. I was also troubled very badly with constipation, which nothing I tried gave any permanent relief until I took Dullam's Great German blood, liver, stomach and kidney remedy and since taking I have been entirely cured. For a tonic, blood purifier and general health restorer I can heartily recommend it. $1 a bottle.

DULLAM'S GREAT GERMAN MEDICINE CO:

My daughter has been afflicted with female trouble for over six years and I have paid out over $750 in vain trying to find relief for her. A lady friend advised her to secure a bottle of Dullam's Great German Female Uterine Tonic and she has been completely cured by it. We gave it a fair trial and the results were wonderful. We cannot recommend it too highly to all ladies who are afflicted.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,

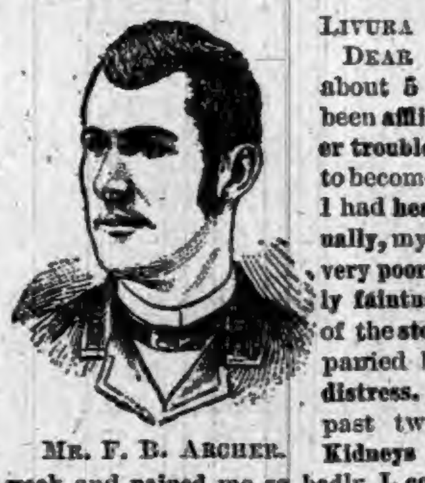
CURED BY LIVURA.



Mr. F. B. Archer.

Livura M'f'g. Co.,
Dear Sirs:—"For about 5 years I have been afflicted with Liver trouble, causing me to become very Bilious. I had headache continually, my appetite was very poor, and a deathly faintness at the pit of the stomach accompanied by a terrible distress. During the past two years my Kidneys became very weak and pained me so badly I could not rest. Owing to extreme nervousness I was unable to attend to my business, and in January I came down with Nervous Prostration. Eight different Physicians have had me under their care, but I grew worse instead of better.

Learning of PITCHER'S LIVURA I began taking it and my improvement was noticeable from the first. I have taken 3 bottles and am ENTIRELY CURED, able to attend to my work, and have not felt so well for 6 years. I give all the credit to

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1867—Continued.

All woodwork composed of oak, walnut and spruce pine, well oiled and varnished shows the natural grain of wood.

The windows are of stained, enameled glass and like many of the churches erected of later years, the ceiling is replaced by a lattice truss roof which gives the inside of the church a lofty, spacious appearance. A fine bell was provided about the date of the occupation of the building.

On Jan. 14th, '77, the church was formally dedicated; Rev. J. D. McCord, of Allegan, Mich., by invitation officiated at the service. There followed a series of continued meetings conducted by the pastor, Rev. Henry Johnson, which resulted in a large accession to the membership.

The personal efforts of the active members and friends had been great both for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the church, and as is usual after such a strain something of a reaction followed, but the fruits of their labors were not lost. Many of those brought in have stood the sifting process of time, and the beautiful and commodious edifice stands an enduring monument of faithful, self-denying exertion.

Rev. Henry Johnson on July 13, '76 was joined in marriage to Miss Ciddy Hare of Auburn, and continued to serve the church acceptably until the fall of '80, when he responded to a call from the the First Presbyterian church at Grand Haven, Mich., one of the most important churches of the denomination, in that state, and removing with his family there resided for a time. Later he accepted the charge of a church at Big Rapids and at this date, he is pastor of a church at South Bend, Ind. In every field, to the gratification of his many Auburn friends, his ministry has been marked by uniform and brilliant success.

Rev. W. F. Mathews supplied the pulpit one year to Oct. 1, 1882, and was succeeded by Rev. J. D. McCord who remained till Nov. 1, 1883. This minister was of mature years, a genial friend, a forcible speaker and speedily won favor in the community at large.

The church was next supplied by Rev. G. W. Barr until Dec. 1884. He, too, was an able preacher, went west, and on occasion revisiting Auburn, entertained an attentive audience by a lecture graphically depicting the wonderful scenery of that section. During his stay, A. C. Wilson, Edward Baker and Richard Elson, were by election added to the eldership. Griswold died, Elson and Miller removed from the state. For a time the pulpit was occupied by Rev. D. S. Stephens, President of Adrian College, Mich. Arrangements had been made for him to continue his services on alternate Sabbaths until a permanent pastor could be secured. His able, interesting and instructive sermons continuously attracted large and appreciative congregations during his preaching here,

At a congregational meeting held May 20, '86, Rev. Henry A. Sawyers who had just completed a regular course in the Lane Theological Seminary at Cincinnati, Ohio, was engaged to supply the church, having already acceptably filled the pulpit several Sabbaths, and, on Sept. 27, '86 responding to a regular call from the church, he was duly installed as pastor by the Presbytery and served faithfully as such until July 1, 1890 when he removed to Cameron, Mo., having received a call from the Presbyterian church of that place.

Mr. Sawyers was married during the first year of his pastorate to Miss Martha A. Scott, an estimable and cultured lady who still shares with her husband the respect and esteem of Auburn people. After the departure of Mr. Sawyers, the church was favored with preaching service only, at intervals until the 14th of the following December when Rev. George Wade Healy, the present pastor, who was then a member of the senior class in the McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago, Ill., began to occupy the pulpit by invitation of the church and continued thus in connection with his studies until graduation in the following spring when he came to reside at Auburn, and was on a regular call from the church, installed as pastor by the Presbytery on April 27, '91.

The church owns the lot adjoining the church edifice on the south. This lot was purchased and paid for several years ago, through the efforts of the Ladies Society of the church, and is intended for occupation as a parsonage. In 1891, the old building which stood on the ground was sold and removed and it is proposed before long to take measures for the erection of a home for the pastor.

The Ladies' Society has been an efficient help in all church matters. During eighteen years by voluntary social gatherings they had raised a large sum of money therewith paying for lots, fitting up the basement, and, within the last year caused the auditorium to be newly carpeted, decorated and furnished with electric lights, contributing largely to the attractive and beautiful appearance of the room as well as to the comfort of the congregation.

The trustees F. J. Yesbera, J. E. Rose, C. E. Emanuel and J. Otto have within the last year procured a new furnace, have had the church exterior painted and other repairs made to bring the building into good shape.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor Society was organized during the pastorate of Mr. Healy and it was mainly through the efforts of this flourishing association that a fine pipe organ specially manufactured for the church, was procured. The young people have assumed payment of the organ which has proved a satisfactory investment and an attractive feature of the services.

The present membership of the church numbers about one hundred and forty-five persons. The members of the session are: E. D. Hartman, Dr. S. B. Johnston, A. C. Wilson, Edward Baker and G. H. Forkner. Mr. Hartman has served as elder since April, 1874 and as clerk, succeeded W. Griswold, Nov. 1878.

A good Sabbath school has long been maintained in connection with the church and has enrolled 125 members. Among its superintendents have been W. W. Griswold, Albert Totten, Richard Elson, S. B. Miller, E. D. Hartman, Edward Baker, S. B. Johnston and F. J. Yesbera, the present official.

Separate and distinct in name but united in purpose, the Presbyterian church of Auburn has ever corperated with other churches of the town in advancing morality and religion and their history is one upon which its faithful members may well reflect with pride and pleasure.

AN INCOME TAX.

Speech of Hon. C. A. O. McClellan in the House of Representatives, March 30, 1892.

How can that be more equitably done than by providing for an income tax? Then as a matter of common justice to the poor people of this country, who have in the main furnished the revenue to run the government for the last twenty-two years, their burdens should be made lighter. Woolen goods are a necessity. They must be worn by the laboring class who work outdoors, and they should be made cheap and durable. To make them cheap under existing tariff laws shoddy must be used iestead of wool. It is a burning shame that a tax of 12 cents a pound should be imposed on wool, and from 60 to 200 per cent on woolen goods, to be paid by hard labor, while John D. Rockefeller, with his income of $10,000,000 a year, is untaxed. It is such a crying in justice that even he should denounce it.

Do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that a tax might, and of right ought to be, levied upon such incomes, so as to enable us to put wool, salt, lumber, coal and farm machinery on the free list and to reduce the tariff on woolen goods. Mr. Chairman, such a tax would enable us to inaugurate and complete many of the great enterprises I have mentioned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will send to the desk and ask the clerk to read what I said upon this subject in the Fifty-first congress. The reasons I then gave are applicable to the question.

The clerk read as follows:

"It is said an income tax is unpopular and odious. That is true; all taxes are odious. They are like sorrow, sickness and death: odious and certain, but they must be endured. It is further said to be odious, because it reveals the secrets of a man's wealth and business. Well, so do all taxes. In my state, and I suppose all other states pursue the same course, a man is compelled to swear to how much personal property he owns, what it consists of, how much he owes and who he owes it to, and if fraud is suspected, he may be brought before an officer and catechised under oath. As long as a man is honest in these matters there is nothing odious about it. It is only when he wishes to deceive that it becomes odious—odious to tell the truth. No law will compel a man to return his income at a greater sum than it is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was in the interest of capital that the income tax was repealed. By the repeal of that tax capital has been relieved from taxation by the Federal government for twenty years, and now I think, in the interest of the people, it ought to be re-enacted. Twenty years ago it produced a revenue of $73,000,000 per annum; the same law would produce now one hundred and fifty millions per annum, just what is needed to pension the soldiers. The argument could not then be made against pensions, that all the tax was collected from the poor people, many of whom were just as deserving as the soldiers themselves. But, strange as it may appear, many of the soldiers have been educated up to the belief that to advocate an income tax was against their interest and would militate against their cause.

The soldiers ought to be more willing to collect their just claims from those who are able to pay it without embarassment than from those who can illy afford to spare their share Is not the proposition just and right? Is it not right that the property of the country should bear its due proportion of taxation? Is it not true that the property of the country is that which is supported and defended by the government. That it generally expends its revenues for the protection of property and remuneration of capitalists?

The principle that property or the income therefrom should support the government is recognized in every state and in every government excepting this. It is admitted by everybody that it is right that the taxes should be levied upon those who will least feel the burden? Can not men who have a net annual income of over $4,000 pay 2 per cent easier than a poor man can pay taxes out of the means which are below the necessities of the support of his family? It strikes me there is nothing more clear than that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I represent a people who are willing to pay and willing to suffer, when need be, for the interest and welfare of the country, and they have proved it upon all occasions; and I say here as their representative that they are ready and willing to pay their due proportion of taxation but no more, and in their name I protest against increasing taxation upon the farmer, the laboring man, and laboring women of the country at the expense of a few capitalists who own most of the wealth.

I believe that taxation should be reduced upon those who are not able to pay and whose necessities compel them to consume, and should be placed upon those who are able to pay and should pay."

Mr. McClellan. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I will say that it appears to me to be right to tax large incomes, and thereby place the burdens of our government where they can be most easily borne, upon accumulations. It would also assist in removing a heavy hand from labor and industry. It takes toll from the rich man's surplus, and cheapens the poor man's necessities.

Mr. Chairman, it may be said that if this house passes such a bill it can not become a law at this time—that the other branch of this body, or the executive will defeat it. In my judgment that is not a sufficient reason why we should not proceed and pass it. If this democrat house passes such a measure, it will assure the people that we are in earnest, and that it is a democratic measure, and it may encourage the delegates to our state and national conventions to insert a plank in our platforms endorsing it and thereby make it a party issue, which, in my judgment, would not only assure the return of a democratic house of representatives, but would also change the political complexion of the other branch of this body and place in the executive chair a man who could not be intimidated by monopolies and corporations. When that grand result shall have been attained, we will again have a happy and contented people. Poverty will not be known in our midst, and peace and prosperity will again prevail among all the people of this, our glorious country. [Applause.]

Death of Ben Butler, the Soldier-Statesman—French Cabinet Ministers Resign in a Body—Wisconsin Receives $500,000—Indiana Senatorial Contest—Strikers Found Guilty.

DEATH OF BEN BUTLER.

His End Came Suddenly at His Washington Home.

A Washington special, dated the 11th inst., says: Benjamin F. Butler, the lawyer, statesman, politician and millionaire manufacturer, died at his Washington residence, No. 220 New Jersey avenue, southeast, at 1:30 o'clock this morning.

The General has always, to a more or less extent, made his residence in Washington, although many of the scenes of his successful ventures have been located elsewhere. During the present winter a case which had been decided against him in the highest courts of the State of Massachusetts and in which he took an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, had demanded his almost constant residence in this city. Every Monday he was a familiar figure at the sessions of that body, when the decisions were handed down. His age, as well as a general impairment of his health while listening to the oral decisions, looking for his own, was a matter of remark time and time again. Finally, a few weeks ago, the case was decided against him. Whether or not the loss of this case, to which he paid such close attention, brought anything more than the sorrows of a casual defeat will not be known. His death created an immense surprise, as it was not even known that he was ailing, any more than any man who had lived and labored so long would. The announcement this morning that he had died at 1:30 from failure of the heart created more than a little surprise, and at that hour of the night details of his taking off were more than meager.

He was at the time of his death 75 years of age.

PARIS EXCITED

Because the French Ministry Has Resigned.

Paris special: The French Ministry has resigned, owing to differences in the Cabinet on the arrest of ex-Minister of Public Works Baihut, and other matters. The greatest excitement prevails, and people throng the streets. The police are out in force and dispersing the crowds.

President Carnot has charged M. Ribot with the duty of reconstructing the Ministry. It is openly charged that the President and M. Ribot are not in earnest in the Panama prosecutions and that they have no intention of bringing the bribe-takers to trial and that the prosecution of DeLesseps, Fontaine, Cottu and Eiffel will be nothing more than a farce.

It is also charged that efforts are being made to postpone the exposure of certain guilty parties until the law of proscription will have taken effect.

Pension Deficency Increased.

Commissioner of Pension Raum appeared before the Deficiency Subcommittee recently and explained his estimates for pension deficiency. His first estimate for this deficiency was over $10,000,000, and the committee was somewhat surprised when he informed them that he now estimated this deficiency at something over 13,800,000.

The Result.

The result of the voting in the electoral colleges was: Cleveland and Stevenson, 278; Harrison and Reid, 144; Weaver and Field, 22. The popular vote for President and Vice President cast November 8 was: Cleveland and Stevenson, 5,579,734; Harrison and Reid, 5,144,409; Weaver and Field, 1,016,659; Bidwell and Cranfil, 288,801.

Indiana Senatorial Contest.

Indianapolis special: Senator Turpie is not going to have such an easy sailing as was supposed for re-election. J. G. Shanklin of Evansville, has appeared as a full-fledged candidate and his friends claim a good following. Now that the ice is broken there is much talk of both Gray and Holman.

Superintendent Killed.

Goshen (Ind.) special: W. W. Cobbum, ex-Superintendent of the County Poor Farm, was instantly killed by a Big Four freight train in this city. He was 65 years old, and removed from the farm to this city. He was one of the most influential farmers in Northern Indiana.

Strikers Found Guilty.

The verdict of the jury who has tried the thirteen strikers charged with riot at the Duquesne Steel Works of the Carnegie Company, was opened in court at Pittsburgh, and finds ten of the accused guilty of riot; two of unlawful assemblage, and one acquitted.

Recovers $500,000.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has affirmed the ruling of Judge Newton in the celebrated State Treasury cases, whereby the State recovers some $500,000 interest money from former treasurers. The decision is confirmed by all the judges.

Murphy Nominated.

Edward Murphy, jr., was nominated for senator by the New York Democratic caucus, the vote standing: Murphy, 85; Cockran, 5.

A $25,000 Elephant.

Chicago is to have a gigantic elephant, larger than the one at Coney Island. A syndicate will begin work on the new animal building to be located near the fair grounds, in a short time. This steel mammoth will be 125 feet high to the ridge of the back and 200 feet to the tip of "howdah." The trunk will be swung by machinery, the ears will flap, the eyes will roll, the tail will wag. Within this trunk will be a calliope to simulate the beast's roar. There will be two floors in this $250,000 elephant, the main floor and ground promenade and dancing hall with a gallery and "stomach floor," where will be located a great restaurant. The animal will be lighted by numerous windows and an abundance of electric lights. The projectors are certain that it can be constructed in three months.

DRIVEN TO DEATH.

The Mafia Outdone by the Paris Terrors

Ishpeming (Mich.) special: The work of vengeance of the Mafia is equalled by facts which have just come to light in connection with the death of Annal Sherman, the overseer in Walton's lumber camp, near this city. Sherman was found dead with a bullet in his breast and a revolver beside him. Gazing stoically at the dead was a Frenchman named Antony Murry, who has been working in the camp. He exclaimed that Sherman had been quietly sitting by a stove when he suddenly drew a revolver and shot himself. A search of the dead man's clothes disclosed an old envelope inside of which was scrawled in French. "If I, Annal Sherman, come to a violent end, charge it to the work of Paris Terrors. Years ago I violated the societies' laws and have since been pursued by one of its members. He overtook me in San Francisco in 1886 and has followed me here. He is hounding me to death." Then followed a brief description of his pursuer. A comparison showed that it fitted Murry exactly and he was at once taken into custody. He practically admitted that the crime was his work. He explained that in 1882 Sherman failed to perform a certain task allotted to him and through the failure two members of the society were guillotined. Since then Sherman has been under the ban of the society and one of its emissaries has been on his trail.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS

To Be Given in Charge of the City at Baltimore.

Baltimore special: Priests and laymen of the Catholic Church in the Archdiocese of Baltimore have been so impressed by the views of Archbishop Ireland on the school question that some of them are considering the advisability of submitting a proposition to the city authorities, providing the Cardinal agrees to their plans.

A circular which embodies the views of Archbishop Ireland's plan has been distributed among the clergy. If the Catholics of Baltimore decide to make a proposition to the city authorities, they may adopt Archbishop Ireland's plan as a basis, or they may offer to let the city take the parochial schools as a part of the public school system without a stipulation that religion shall be taught during or after school hours. Religious instruction would then be given in Sunday-schools only. Nothing definite has been decided upon. The only facts at present known are that the circular has been distributed and that the subject is under consideration.

A CHICAGO POLICEMAN

Kills the Man Who Accused Him of Drunkenness and Insulting a Woman.

Chicago special: William Kinsella, a substitute police officer, shot and killed Charles Smith, colored, at Twenty-sixth and State streets. Eye witnesses declared that the officer was under the influence of liquor, and that the shooting was scarcely less than a homicide. Smith had accused the officer of insulting a woman and of being drunk, and Kinsella resented the accusation by placing Smith under arrest. The officer then pushed the prisoner against the patrol box and calling on the crowd that had collected to fall back, drew his revolver and fired twice, one bullet passing through Smith's body and the other lodging in his head. Kinsella, who was placed under arrest, admitted that he had been drinking, but claims that Smith knocked him down twice and that he shot in self-defense. Capt. Jenkins of the Harrison Street Station, is inclined to doubt the officer's version of the affair.

FIVE INJURED.

Collision Between a Street Car and a Locomotive.

Five persons were injured in a collision between a street car and a New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio locomotive at the Union street crossing, Cleveland, Ohio. A Newburg belt line electric motor going towards the city was approaching the crossing at a high rate of speed. The approach to the track on Union street at that point is down grade. The motorman lost control of the car on account of the slippery condition of the rails and it dashed into a freight engine which was crossing Union Street. The motor car was badly wrecked and the following named passengers injured: J. Peelock, bruised on the head. Arthur Tasfler, cut in face with glass. Wm. L. Buddbill, cut in face and head. Mrs. Mary Welch, bruised about the head. Wm. Carter was badly injured in back, and arms badly bruised.

BLOWN TO ATOMS

While Getting Ready to Shoot a Gas Well.

C. M. Johnson, an employe of the Hercules Torpedo Company, Lima, Ohio, was blown to atoms near Kokomo, Ind., while making preparation to shoot a gas well. He left this city and drove to the company's magazine, about two miles south of the city, for a supply of nitro-glycerine, with which he was going to operate on a well on the Batey farm near by. Farmers in the vicinity of the magazine heard a loud report and hurried to the spot. The body was torn in small fragments, and the building in which the explosives were kept was reduced to splinters. Johnson was 24 years of age and was well known among the gas men of the belt, he having been engaged in his dangerous business in this vicinity for the past two or three years.

A Toledo Shoe Firm Collapses.

The big boot and shoe house of Dewsy, Rodgers & Co., Toledo, Ohio, have failed. The individual members of the firm may be good for the liabilities, but the company has at least temporarily gone under. The liabilities are placed at $400,000 and the assets at $350,000. The liabilities are variously placed as follows: First National Bank, $45,000; Holcomb National Bank, $35,000. Ketcham National Bank, $15,000; due eastern concerns, $305,000; total, $400,000. The banks were fully secured by the firm, which promptly turned over all accounts to the Toledo people involved. The cause of the failure, it is understood, lies chiefly in the fact that the partners could not agree on a reorganization or a sub-division of the partnership which expired by limitation January 1, 1893. S. Z. Foster was appointed receiver and will continue the business.

Blaine's Life Hanging by a Thread.

Ex-Secretary James G. Blaine is much worse. His strength is failing and his death may be expected any day. A special from Washington, dated the 10th inst., at 1 a. m., says: At midnight Mr. Blaine's physicians issued the following bulletin: "Mr. Blaine's condition has been more favorable this evening. He is now, at midnight, sleeping quietly and shows a fair degree of strength. The probabilities are that no change for the worse will take place for to-night, although no positive assurance can be given on this point. As compared with last night and this morning he is better.

The Death Penalty.

Havana special: Mr. Toneled, an American physician, who is visiting Havana for the purpose of making a comparative study of the various methods of execution of criminals, witnessed the shooting, a few days ago of Leonardo Cuevas, the soldier who was condemned to death for committing a murderous assault with a razor upon his commandant. In an interview subsequent to the execution Mr. Toneled stated that he was fully convinced that death by shooting is more nearly instantaneous and less painful than death by electricity, and that the former method is preferable also because of its simplicity.

Stockbridge Wins.

Michigan has grown accustomed to hot senatorial fights but it has had none since the memorable Ferry-Bagley struggle, which has come up to that which closed Thursday. Every strategy has been employed and wires have been pulled until they threatened to part. Stockbridge was nominated by the Republican caucus on the first ballot by the following vote: Stockbridge, 48; Luce, 20; Hubbell, 10; Hartsuff, Rumsdell, Spaulding, 2 each; B. M. Cutcheson, 1; O'Donnell, 1; J. C. Fitzgerald, 1. The vote was subsequently made unanimous.

Blaine's Life Slowly Ebbing Away.

A Washington special, dated the 11th inst., 1 a. m., says: Dr. Johnson last evening said Mr. Blaine had rested comfortably all day and was much better. He had rallied considerably and there was no reason as far as Dr. Johnson could see to expect a fatal termination during the night. Mr. Blaine's physicians authorize the following: "Mr. Blaine passed a comfortable day until 8 o'clock last evening, when he became not so well, and at this hour, 1 a. m., he is still losing strength. He is liable to die at any time."

Bitter Poverty.

The infant child of Stephen Jones, living in the northwestern part of Kenton, Ohio, froze to death the other night. They are very poor people, and had no fuel. When they awoke they found their infant lying near them frozen stiff. Another child sleeping in the same room had its toes frozen so badly that amputation may be necessary.

Electors Cast Their Vote.

In the capital of each of forty-one States in the Union the presidential electors chosen at the November election met at noon Monday, Jan. 9, and formally cast their votes. The electors in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi cast their votes under State laws December 7.

Several Seamen Missing.

London special: The British steamer Fernside, from Odessa, Dec. 12, for Christiana, has been wrecked five miles from Lauyig. The crew left the vessel in the small boats. Eleven men have been landed, but the captain and eight men, who were in one of the boats, are missing.

Untied the Rope.

Peter Bell and W. W. Lehigh fell forty feet from a scaffold at the World's Fair grounds, Chicago. Bell was instantly killed and Lehigh will probably die from his injuries. A third workman untied a rope which held the scaffold in place, not noticing that anybody was upon it.

A Wealthy Oregonian Dead.

William S. Ladd, one of the wealthiest men in the Northwest, died at his home in Portland, Ore. He leaves a wife, two sons and one daughter, the latter the wife of a New York banker. The value of his estatate is estimated at from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000.

They'll Go, You Bet.

The New York Press publishes an invitation to the feminine school-teachers of New York and vicinity to take fifty of their number to the World's Fair at Chicago, where they are to spend ten days. All the expenses of the trip will be borne by the Press.

Erie Threatened With a Tie-Up.

Lima (O.) special: There are rumors of a tie-up on the Erie railroad system. General Manager Tucker says that the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio lost over $1,000,000 during the last year and that therefore a reduction in expenses is possible.

Two Legs and an Arm Left.

Michael Deffrona and James Defalico, Italians, who were blasting out a well at Nelson, W. Va., were blown to pieces. The dynamite they were using exploded unexpectedly. But two legs and a single arm were found of the men.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

St. Petersburg special: A frightful accident is reported from Fischischek, in the Province of Wilna. The boiler of the public baths, at that place, exploded and six persons were instantly killed and fifteen mortally injured.

Hurled Against a Tree.

Near Ostrander, Ohio, Benjamin Jaggers was thrown from a load of fodder, striking against a tree with great force, breaking his left leg midway between the knee and thigh. The leg was broken squarely off.

Seriously Burned.

At Loudonville, Ohio, Mrs. Mary Leininger was severely burned about the face and hands while trying to start a fire with coil-oil. Her hair and clothing were considerably scorched. Her recovery is doubtful.

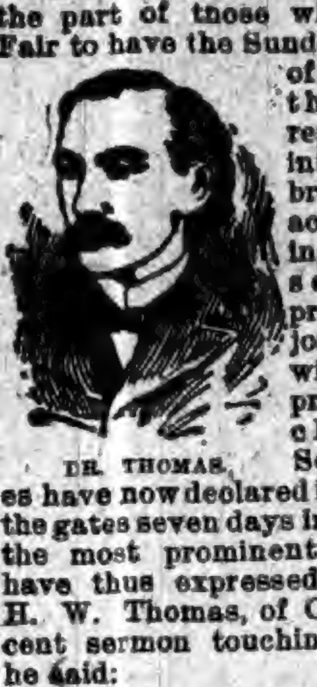
FAVORS AN OPEN FAIR.

DR. H. W. THOMAS DISCUSSES THE SUBJECT.

The Eminent Chicago Preacher Gives Reasons Why the World's Fair Should Not Be Closed on the First Day of the Week.

Says It's Not Sinful.



DR. THOMAS.

There is to be a combined effort on the part of those who favor an open Fair to have the Sunday-closing clause of the law making the appropriation repealed. Strong influences are to be brought to bear, and, according to Washington advices, it seems altogether probable that a majority of Congress will yield to the pressure of the anti-closing people. Some of the churches have now declared in favor of opening the gates seven days in the week. Among the most prominent clergymen who have thus expressed themselves is Dr. H. W. Thomas, of Chicago. In a recent sermon touching on this subject he said:

> Imperfect as may be the present social order, the public intelligence, liberty, justice, and general well being and doing of the nineteenth century are very far in advance of the first century. But almost every step of this progress has been resisted by an unwise, a narrow and dogged conservatism. Royalty and ecclesiasticism have resisted liberty and democracy; the new truths of science and religion have been contested at every step; and in the fierce battles radicalism has sometimes been destructive. In our most intelligent and liberal age the extremes of radicalism are less violent and dangerous; and where church and state are separated, ultra-conservatism has lost the power to enforce its demands. It can make ugly faces, call hard names, silence and expel scholars and preachers, but can no longer imprison, banish, and burn heretics; but it still stands in the way of the larger life of man. An illustration of this is seen in the meetings and discussions of the American Sabbath Union, and in the extreme conservatism in attitude of the churches opposed to opening the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday. The mistake of these generally well-intending people is in two things: they fail to see what this World Exposition is and what it is for, and their interpretation of the meaning and uses of the Sabbath is too narrow.
> The nations of the earth have gladly consented to unite with our country in a great Columbian celebration of its discovery. In this will be brought together the results, not of four centuries alone, but of all the centuries—the results of learning, art, science, government, religion. Necessarily, the cost is large; but it is not a business, was not projected to make money, but was made possible by the money given by the people of our own city, by the different States and the nation, and by the governments of the world. It is not a business for gain, but a great and friendly gathering of the millions of earth, each land bringing its richest treasures, that all may rejoice in the peace and progress of these great years. It is a school, a church, such as was never possible before, nor can soon be again. Its educational, its moral, its religious value to those who look upon the galleries of art, the halls of machinery, the collections of antiquity, the results of all industry and learning, and the growing beauty and good of the world, will be incalculable. It means for each one a larger life, and for the millions of comparatively poor and laboring people this is the one opportunity of their lives; a scene to enlarge the life of the young, a vision to bless the aged before they go hence. And yet these conservative, puritanical Sabbatarians would close the gates of this world school and church on Sunday, and in the name of Him who said, "It is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day!"
>
> Let the machinery be stopped Saturday night; let the morning hours of Sunday be for rest and worship; then open the doors, reduce the rates, and thus honor the rational observance of the American Sabbath by giving the poor and the laboring classes the best possible opportunity to see and enjoy this wonder of the ages. And the preachers and the educated classes could not do better than to go and mingle freely and kindly with the people, as guides and teachers to explain the great works of art. The labor can thus be lightened, and the day be rich in blessings to all. And why object to the necessary work, and to receiving money at the gates? Is it not work to open the churches Sunday? And what is the difference between asking the people for money at the gate, and asking them for money as soon as they get inside the church?
>
> All time is sacred; labor is as sacred as rest. The command to work six days is just as binding as it is to rest the seventh. Nature makes no change on Sunday, but God has appointed one in seven of man's days for rest, and man hallows the Sabbath in thought and feeling and act by devoting it to bodily rest and the improvement of the higher life, and hence a portion of the day should be given to worship; but "the Sabbath is for man," to be used for his greatest good, and hence no cast-iron rules can be laid down for its observance; there may be times when it is more religious to work than to rest or go to church. Christianity is the liberty of the spirit, and not the bondage of the letter of the law; and yet it is for the letter, and not the spirit of the Sabbath, that these rigid conservatives are contending. We should all enjoy a quiet Sabbath day at the Exposition; but closing the gates will not bring such quiet, nor will opening them add to the noise and confusion, nor much, if any, lessen the travel. If closed on Sunday, people will stay over Saturday and go home Sunday, or come Sunday to be here Monday. There will be two or three hundred thousand strangers here every Sunday for six months; we have to face this condition of things; and in no other way can there be found so much quiet, so few temptations to wrong, and so many opportunities and incentives for the good, as in opening the gates of the Fair. To my mind, it is not only narrow and unwise to close the gates on Sunday but a great wrong.
>
> And we must all regret that the advocates of the Sunday closing have ceased to be reasonable, not to say gentlemanly and honest, in their methods. It is humiliating when ministers of the gospel declare that it were better to have the cholera in our land than to have the Fair open Sunday, and say that those who are opposed to their views are "disreputable," and speak sneeringly of those who observe the seventh instead of the first day of the week as the day of rest.

MANY LEGISLATURES MEET.

Governor Flower in His Message Touches on the Buffalo Strike.

The New York Legislature was convened, William Sulzer, of New York, being made Speaker of the House, and Mr. Maltby, of St. Lawrence County, the Republican leader. The Governor's message was read in both houses and an adjournment taken for one week. Gov. Flower, referring in his message to State institutions, discloses that he has visited nearly, if not quite, all the State asylums, and he holds that his recommendations of legislation must have the weight due to judgment founded on personal observation. So close an inquiry into State interests by a Governor is unusual. The State has financial obligations amounting to $450,000, and a treasury balance of $1,701,487. Touching the Buffalo strike, the Governor announces the expenditure by the State to have been $192,647, and then adds: "Employes have the right to strike and peaceably persuade others to join them, and in their earnest and lawful efforts to benefit their condition they may always feel sure that public sympathy is with them and against selfish corporations. But every citizen and corporation, every employe and employer, must observe and respect the authority of law and government."

Dealing with the law against "sweat shops" and its results, the Governor says: "The present law does not go far enough to remedy all the evils which have grown up under this system. If the manufacturer escapes the responsibility and expense of running a factory, he should be compelled to keep a register of those who are making up his goods, and no person should be given work who could not produce a certificate from an inspector, stating that he occupied healthy and suitable quarters for the purpose of manufacturing."

Merry War in Pennsylvania.

At the opening of the biennial session of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, the returns of the election of members of the House, as certified by the Secretary of the Commonwealth, were presented by Mr. Harrity. When Crawford county was reached the chief clerk substituted for the returns certifying the election of Wilbur P. Higby (Democrat) the document awarded Saturday last to William H. Andrews (Republican), by Judge Henderson, before whom Andrews had raised the question of the legality of Higby's election. The Democrats, led by Messrs. Fow, Wherry, and Ritter, made an ineffectual attempt to check this action, but Chief Clerk Voorhees declared that nothing was in order but the reading of the returns. Mr. Fow denounced the proceedings as an unheard-of outrage. Gov. Pattison's message referred to the Homestead strike and said the entire community seemed to surrender to the disorderly element. He criticised the civil authorities for their weak action. The cost of maintaining the militia at Homestead, he says, was over $438,000. He recommends that corporations be more heavily taxed and a tax raised from inheritances. The coal combines came in for a severe scoring.

The Dakotas.

At the joint session of the two houses of the South Dakota Legislature Governor Sheldon, after having been sworn in, delivered his inaugural address. The document was brief, and after congratulating the people upon their prosperous condition, touched upon State matters and calls the attention of the Legislature to the fact that no provision has yet been made for the election of judges of various courts whose terms of office expire next year. It suggests an appropriation for the World's Fair, and urges the early selection of all lands granted for educational purposes by the General Government. It asks that changes in the law be made so that railway commissioners will be elected by the people and that some amendments in the present ballot system be made.

The chief interest in the session of the North Dakota Legislature centers in the contest for a successor to United States Senator Casey. The Republicans have a clear majority, and the result hinges on the decision of the party caucus.

Lively Session at Lincoln.

An attempt to organize the Nebraska Senate began with a ballot for temporary secretary and resulted in a strict party vote: Republicans, 14; Populists, 14; and Democrats, 5. The Senate then adjourned till 3 p. m. When Secretary of State Allen reached Knox County in the roll-call he called "Chester Norton," the Republican. There was at once a protest from the Populists and Democrats, but the protest was overridden and the roll-call proceeded, although the Populists refused to answer to their names. At the afternoon session the House organized permanently, elected James N. Gaffin (Ind.) Speaker and Eric Johnson (Ind.) Chief Clerk, the Democrats voting with the Independents.

Gov. McKinley's Message.

Gov. McKinley, in his annual message to the Legislature, reviews the financial condition of the State, which shows a deficiency in the funds amounting to $69,888.32. He says the revenues of the present year will not justify the sum of the appropriations made for the preceding year. He advises that economy be practiced, and that appropriations be kept within the estimated amount of revenue. He recommends that the voice of the people be heeded in the demands made for reform in municipal government.

Crafts Chosen Speaker.

The Thirty-eighth General Assembly of the State of Illinois completed its permanent organization and is now in session. Some preliminary motions were made, and then, on motion of Free P. Morris, Clayton E. Crafts, of Cook County, was placed in nomination for permanent Speaker on behalf of the Democrats. Edgar C. Hawley, of Kane, was named for the Republicans. Mr. Crafts was elected.

Stockbridge Is Leading.

According to a dispatch the Senatorial question absorbed all the interest in the Michigan Legislature, which was called to order at Lansing. The Stockbridge and the Luce factions are hard at work, and, while each side claims the advantage, it looks as though the former would control the most votes. William A. Tateum, the Republican candidate for Speaker, was elected, together with the other nominees of the Republican caucus.

Legislatures of Other States.

CALIFORNIA.—The California Legislature assembled, the Republicans organizing the Senate by electing Senator R. B. Carpenter, of Los Angeles, President pro tem. and the Democrats organizing the Assembly with F. H. Gold, of Merced, as Speaker and George Peckham, of Santa Clara, of chief clerk. Gov. Markham's address was not presented at the opening, and no other business was transacted.

TENNESSEE.—The House organized, but the Senate only selected a Speaker. After balloting all day the Democratic Senators in caucus upon the eighty-second ballot selected Senator W. C. Dismukes, from Sumner, for Speaker. The contest was a long one and aroused great interest, because Governor-elect Turney is in bad health, and should he die during his term the Speaker of the Senate becomes Governor.

MONTANA.—The Democrats have secured control of the organization of the House of Representatives, thus assuring the election of a Democratic United States Senator. On joint ballot the Legislature will stand thirty-six Democrats, three Populists and thirty-two Republicans.

MINNESOTA.—The two branches of the Minnesota Legislature met and organized. Republican caucuses had been held and its officers chosen. After the members of the House had been sworn in, W. E. Lee of Todd County was chosen Speaker, and F. A. Johnson of Ramsey County chief clerk, and the House was ready for business.

DELAWARE.—Both houses of the General Assembly organized. The members-elect took their oaths on a Latin Bible printed in 1531.

Terse Tales of the Telegraph.

A COMPANY has been formed to establish a plant on the Pacific coast for making armor plate for ships.

BOB PICKETT was frozen to death at Birmingham, Ala., the first death of the kind ever known in Alabama.

A NEGRO named Joe Williams is wanted at Omaha for poisoning a family named Ewing. One child died.

GRAFILO GONZALE, a Starr County, Texas, ranchman, was called to his door and shot. The murder was committed by Mexican bandits.

THE remains of Miss E. A. Ayers, a telegraph operator, were found in the ruins of the burned depot at Brighton, Cal. She had been murdered.

WALTER BELL, wanted at Flagstaff, Ari., for double murder and horse stealing, and who broke jail there a month ago, has been recaptured at Nogales.

THE Rev. Father Schwaler, the priest who committed suicide at Covington, Ky., was buried in consecrated ground, something unusual in the case of a suicide.

A VEIN of silver lead fifteen feet in width and assaying seventy-two ounces of silver to the ton, has been discovered in the township of Baine, Fontenac County, Ont.

MISS MARY GARRETT, of Baltimore, by a gift of $306,977, has increased the fund for a medical school for women at Johns Hopkins' University to the required $500,000.

IN Lemi County, Idaho, a number of freight teams bound from Salmon City to Kettle Creek were caught by a snow slide. Albert Bigger and E. Stein were killed. Dave Kerr and Elmer Black caught on a tree top and saved themselves. Two horses were killed and much freight was destroyed.

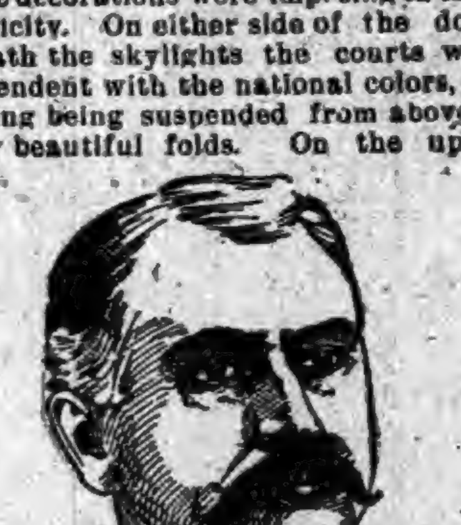
MATTHEWS AND NYE!

ARE INAUGURATED GOVERNOR AND LIEUT. GOVERNOR.

Ceremonies in the Corridors of the State Capital, in the Presence of the Legislature—Prominent People Present—The Decorations, Etc.

A special from Indianapolis, dated the 9th inst., says: Claude Matthews was inaugurated Governor and Mortimer Nye Lieutenant-Governor of Indiana, this afternoon. The ceremonies were appointed for 1:30 o'clock, but it was later than that hour before they took place. The south corridor of the Capitol was the scene of the inauguration, and a distinguished body of men and women collected as spectators. The corridors upstairs and down, stairways and other places in the capitol afforded a fine field of observation.

The decorations were imposing in their simplicity. On either side of the dome beneath the skylights the courts were resplendent with the national colors, the bunting being suspended from above in many beautiful folds. On the upper floors the flags were of the largest pattern, while those below were more numerous though somewhat smaller. Some of the columns were also gracefully twined with red, white, and blue. The two courts were draped alike with the exception that the one south of the dome, where the inaugural ceremonies took place, bore the additional decoration of the State seal, displayed on a large silken banner of blue. This was suspended directly above the platform, and showed to the best advantage the retreating buffalo and the vigorous woodman plying his ax.



GOVERNOR MATTHEWS.

Prior to the inauguration, the two Houses met separately for a few minutes. The Senate was called to order at 1:40 p. m. The President of the Senate announced that it was in order for the Senate to proceed to the place of inaugural, the body to be met in the corridor by the members of the House, the senators to return to the chamber after the inaugural ceremonies. The doorkeepers then arranged the members by twos, and proceeded to the corridor to meet the House.

The House did not meet until 1:30. It had just been called to order when the doorkeeper of the Senate appeared and announced that the Senate was waiting in the corridor to join the House. The members of the House arose, and, forming by twos, marched to the corridor and took place in line in the rear of the Senators. The band, which had been stationed on the second floor, began to play, and the Senators and Representatives marched north along the second floor corridor and down stairs to the seats prepared for the members of the two Houses in the corridors under the skylight.

At 1:45 the members of the Legislature, the senators heading the column, marched into the court and filled the seats provided for them, the senators being given the front places before the rostrum. The galleries above were filled with on-lookers, and the human figures contrasted with the radiant colorings of the draperies, formed a beautiful and animated scene.

The attendance of ladies was not large, but enough were present to show that the sex took an interest in the ceremonies.

The band, with a full complement of pieces, enlivened the time of waiting by playing a number of inspiring pieces.

Seated on the platform were Senator David S. Turpie, ex-Governor Albert G. Porter, William H. English, Governor Ira J. Chase, Mrs. and Miss Matthews, wife and daughter of the Governor-elect, the State officers, including members of the Supreme and Appellate Court and others.

Governor Matthews, and Lieutenant-Governor Nye appeared upon the rostrum at 2 o'clock, escorted by a Joint Committee of the Senate and House. They were greeted by a pleasant recognition, which appeared to be strictly non-partisan, as the Republicans joined their Democratic colleagues in the applause. The escort consisted of Temporary President Griffith of the Senate; Speaker Curtis of the House; Senators Holland, McGregor, and Wishard, and Representatives Cullop, Sulzer, and Redman.

President Griffith called the joint convention to order and prayer was offered by the Rev. Joseph A. Milburn, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, of this city. There were noises about the corridors, talking and moving feet upon the tiles, which prevented the hearing of the prayer by those of the audience who were at any distance. He prayed for a blessing upon the people of the State and upon those who were to take up the great duties to which they had been called.

The roll of senators and representatives was then called, Roll Clerk Waltz calling the senators and Acting Chief Clerk Newkirk the representatives. President Griffith declared a quorum of both bodies present, and Judge Reinhart, Chief Justice of the Appellate Court, administered the oath to Governor Claude Matthews, who then spoke, his address partaking both of the nature of an inaugural and a message to the general assembly.

After Governor Matthews had spoken Lieutenant Governor Mortimer Nye took the oath of office, administered by Judge McCabe of the Supreme Court, and spoke briefly and forcibly.

After the inauguration ceremonies each House returned to its hall and went into brief session.

An Appropriate Name.

A—Why do you call your dog Hector instead of Cæsar?

B—Because he put on so many airs when I called him Cæsar that there was no getting along with him.

Prince Roland Bonaparte.

Prince Roland Bonaparte, whose wife's immense dowry was a part of the revenue from the gambling-house of Monte Carlo, will not marry again, it is believed. The Prince now enjoys the benefit of his wealth, but is sensitive about the source from which it is derived. Indeed, it is said that he dropped the acquaintance of a lady friend who was so indiscreet as to solicit his influence at Monte Carlo in behalf of a young lady singer that was seeking an engagement.

A COMPLETE SET OF THE WORKS OF

CHARLES DICKENS

FREE!

The Most Valuable and Remarkable Premium Ever Offered Free with any Periodical.

A MARVEL IN BOOK-MAKING.

A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, IN 12 LARGE VOLUMES, FREE.

There has just been published A Set of the Works of Charles Dickens, in Large and Handsome Volumes, printed from entirely new plates, with new type. By special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer to our patrons this splendid set of Dickens' Works, postpaid, free. Charles Dickens was the greatest novelist who ever lived. No author before or since his time has won the fame that he achieved, and his works are even more popular to-day than during his lifetime. They abound in wit, humor, pathos, masterly delineation of character, vivid descriptions of places and incidents, thrilling and skilfully wrought plots. Each book is intensely interesting. No home should be without a set of these great and remarkable works. Not to have read them is to be far behind the age in which we live. The twelve volumes in this set contain the following world-famous works, each one of which is published complete, unchanged and absolutely unabridged:

DAVID COPPERFIELD,
MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT,
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY,
DOMBEY AND SON,
BLEAK HOUSE,
LITTLE DORRIT,
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND,
PICKWICK PAPERS,
BARNABY RUDGE AND CHRISTMAS STORIES,
OLIVER TWIST AND GREAT EXPECTATIONS,
THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP AND THE UNCOMMERCIAL TRAVELER,
A TALE OF TWO CITIES, HARD TIMES, AND THE MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD.

THE PLAN.

We will send a complete set of these books FREE by mail, postage paid, guaranteeing safe delivery, as follows: To any old subscriber, who sends one dollar, and renews their subscription to either of the following publications for one year:

THE PEOPLE'S LITERARY COMPANION,
—OR—
The National Farmer and Home Magazine

To any new subscriber, who sends one dollar for either of the above periodicals for one year.

This is the grandest offer ever made, and the greatest bargain ever offered. Up to this time the price of a complete set of Dickens' Works has been ten dollars or more. The use of modern, improved printing, folding and stitching machinery, the present extremely low price of white paper, and the great competition in the book trade are the factors which made this wonderful offer possible. Bear in mind that we offer, not a single volume, but the entire set of twelve volumes all free to subscribers. All may now afford the luxury of owning a handsome set of Dickens' works. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Do not neglect or put off this wonderful opportunity. Send at once; you will be delighted with the charming books, and, as long as you live, never cease to regard it as the best investment of a dollar you ever made. Address all communications to and write, and are possessed of fair intelligence, you are fully qualified to make a grand success of what we offer you. We have lately published at great expense and labor a perfect wonder in the way of an illustrated Gift Book, suitable to all classes, an ornament to any home, and at a price that brings it within the reach of all, even those of moderate means. Heretofore only those who indulged in luxuries have felt that they could afford a book of this class, as they are sold in book stores at $5.00 and upwards. The book which we offer is not in any way inferior to those above referred to, but is far superior to hundreds of books of this nature that are sold at prices exceeding ours by an enormous per cent. It is selling with a rush wherever shown. Agents have only to show the book and mention the price, and it sells on its merits without further talking. No better Christmas, New Year's or Birthday present can be selected. It will sell, not only for holiday trade, but at all seasons of the year, for the reason that all will want it in their homes, and will have it as soon as they know the low price at which our agents can furnish them. Reader, if you need profitable employment, and a business in which you can and will take pride, as well as make money rapidly, do not fail to send for circulars containing private terms to agents, and full information, which will be sent FREE upon application. Old and new agents alike are making handsome salaries—yes, fortunes. Many of those who are making the best records are new at the agency business, having had no previous experience. ☞Make a start—the field is entirely new. No such terms have been offered agents as we now offer on this wonderful book. Special qualifications not necessary, for it sells everywhere at sight. Perhaps you have at some time been unsuccessful at the agency business. If so, there is every reason why you should try this, the PRINCE of gift books, as failure is impossible if you make A START. Write us to-day, study our circulars and directions, then order an outfit and go to work with push and energy. You may make the greatest mistake of your life, if you allow this GOLDEN opportunity to pass unimproved.

IF YOU CAN READ

BEST SIMPLEST AND CHEAPEST

THE STEAM produced by the process of cooking cannot escape, is absorbed by the article in the roaster, and acts as a basting. There is no evaporation, no drying up or burning, hence no shrinkage or loss of weight, and all the flavor and nutritious qualities of the food are retained. Tough meats are made tender, and any article roasted or baked will be sweeter, healthier and more digestible. Put the food in the roaster, place the roaster in a well heated oven; the roaster will do the cooking. It requires no attention. Can only be bought from dealers, the trade supplied by:

THE STORY OF ULLA.

Told at the Edge of the Northern Sea, and Written for This Paper.

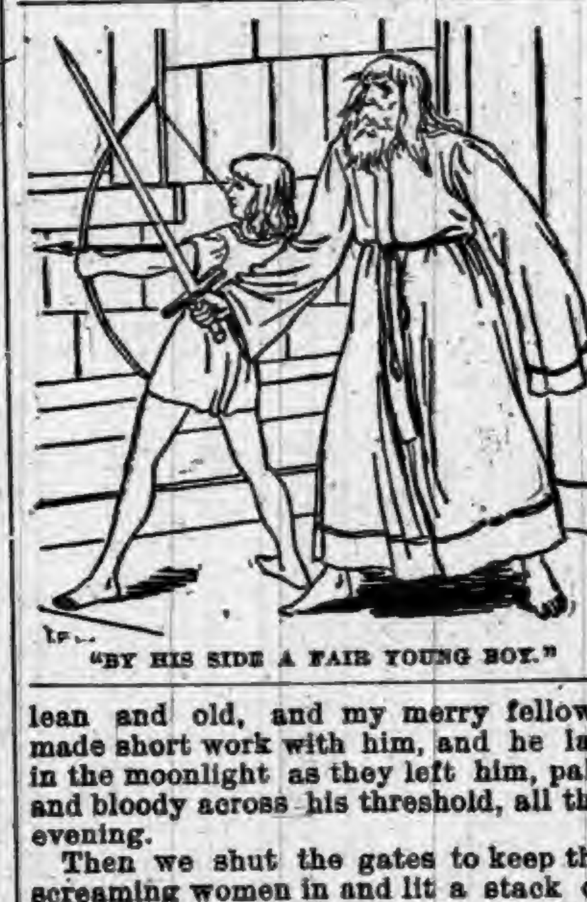
BY EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD.

CHAPTER VI.

It was just at dusk that evening: the western sky was streaked with crimson and black; the white mist was lying in thin wreaths along the purple river meadows; the landrails were croaking in the fern and the night jars churning on the oak; the little stars were twinkling in the smooth heaven, and the pale crescent of the moon was adip upon the sea when a thin curl of smoke rose from the thatch of a hut in the fishing village below the burgh. A minute after a bright tongue of flame shot up and a cry of alarm rose from inside the stockades. "Surely some careless housewife had let an ember fall among the thatch," they thought, and the great oak gates creaked upon their hinges and out to the extinguishing rushed in their loose sheepskin cloaks two luckless herds. As they passed the portal an arrow sped across the grass, and, plunging deep into the chest of the foremost, he bounded half his height into the air, then fell with a heavy thud into the fern and went rolling and kicking and screaming down the hillside. At the same minute an unseen hand from behind, with a single sweep of a good Norway ax, severed the head of the other from his body as he stood glaring after his comrade, and now the starlight was twinkling on the weapons and mail of hurrying Norsemen, and while the fierce cry of "Odin! Odin!" went up to the black sky, and the dusky crows, startled from their roosting places, flapped dismally about between the stars, a long, low wail of fear and terror rose from the hundred corners of that doomed citadel.

And the game was ours from the beginning. Numerous and strong, fierce and bloodthirsty as bloodhounds on the trail, we raced for the open gates, and carried the first one and swept round the way between under the unguarded palisades, where a dozen men might have held us at bay, and so to the inner portal, where we stabbed a brave old crone who tried to shut it in our face, and there the place had fallen—the wolves were in the fold.

And wild work we made of it! As we gained the entrance the English chieftain rushed out of the mid-door of his hall in his nightwear (for he had already gone to bed), a naked sword in his hand and by his side a fair young boy with curly yellow hair. By Thor, I would not have been the wild fowl on the neighboring marsh when that comely lad was hungry. He shot so close and straight, although the light was poor for shooting, that had there been a dozen such it would have gone badly indeed with us. At the first shaft he pierced Kolbiorn through the wrist, and the second wounded stalwart Sveinke in the thigh; then he shot one in the throat and another in the stomach, and kept us all at bay until his last arrow was spent, and then died far down on the haft of bloody Dagson's bear spear like the fierce young cub he was. As for the other—although he was stout enough of heart, yet his limbs were lean and old, and my merry fellows made short work with him, and he lay in the moonlight as they left him, pale and bloody across his threshold, all the evening.



"BY HIS SIDE A FAIR YOUNG BOY."

Then we shut the gates to keep the screaming women in and lit a stack or two to give us light and so fell on. But why should I try to tell you all we did that evening? Why should I try to picture the wild, fierce hell of lust and cruelty and rapine that raged within those grassy shambles under the mild white starlight? And if I had a hundred pens I could not tell each incident as it befell, and if I did you might not care to listen. If I had a hundred pens I could scarce recount how, one by one, we first dragged the men from their hiding places, and how some of them fought desperately, while some submitted sullenly, but whichever way it was we killed them. Or how the women screamed and struggled in the arms of the sea rovers and cried for mercy and tore the yellow beards of their new, grimly laughing masters, and were sent down to hades, the old and lean ones, and how the others—the pale, fair girls, with fear-bright eyes and long, loose hair and bare feet, all in their torn, dishevelled night gear—were bound hand and foot and lashed to the pillars in the dining-hall, or how the little ones moaned and wailed, and hid behind the heaps of dead and strove to wake with timid petulance those who would never wake again, or, often, with their cherished playthings locked tightly within their arms, crept into wondrous corners and hid from us—ask me no smaller detail, for I could surfeit you with horrors until compassion dimmed your eyes and stayed your reading!

For an hour the place was full of the guttural shouts of men and the shrieks of women, the scream of the maiden and cry of the mother losing her little one; the wail of the captive and the moan of the dying down in the shadows; and men ran here and there struggling with white-shrouded forms, or dragging by heel or hair strange shapes into dusky corners, and the fires blazed and the sparks fell—and then, presently, because there were no more to kill, the noise died down until presently silence reigned, broken only by the laughing and shouting of my men, and thus we gathered in the hall, relit the lamps, brushed off the remnants of the earlier evening supper and laid out for ourselves all the best we could put our hands on. And fierce, wild revelry my fellows made of it. The hot blood of rapine and pillage had got into their veins and they heated it higher with the strong, abundant drink from that British chieftain's hiding places, until they were more like a tawny, handsome band of furies than mortal men—gods! I think I never brought such a crew of devils to that shore before. They made the rafters ring with their wild pagan hymns; they danced and shouted and ate and drank, while the pale captive girls stood huddling in the shadows or waited trembling on them, and the wine and ale went streaming down the floor among the blood and litter, and the torches flared, and the dogs howled outside. Oh, it was strange, wild revelry and went on for half the night-time.

It must have been near the dawn and most of the maidens lay swooning upon the floor between weariness and terror, and half the rovers were drunk as swine, when they fetched in the dead chieftain, setting him, pale and bloody, in his chair, and putting a cup into his hands while the ribaldest fellow there made a song and sung it to him. Then next a cry arose—who started it I know not, but may God forgive him—for the English franklin's daughter! We had not seen her—she was not among the captives—and now a hundred buxom fellows were on foot hunting with torch and lamp high and low in every crack and corner of the burgh to find her. Unhappy damsel, they hunted futilely everywhere until they came to the small round tower on the cliff verge; there the strong oak door was barred and shut from within, and a wild yell of drunken pleasure told their quarry was at bay.

What was it that made me just then so sick of all that revelry and sat like a black foreboding on my soul? I know not, but I turned, and, weary of the glare and tumult, slowly left the burgh and walked down to the beach, where lay my ship, just as the men were making a tall mound of sticks and heath and timbers about the door of the doomed tower that held the silent princess.

Climbing on board I gave orders to those who had stood by the Wolf to make all ready for the sea, then threw myself down listless, strangely sad, and chilly as one in ague, by my place at the tiller to await the coming of the pillagers. And presently, one by one, the sons of the creek came reeling down the path, singing as they stumbled down the darkness and carrying bundles and bags, and furs, and cups, and weapons in sheafs, and dragging faltering slaves, and surly, snarling dogs in leashes, and so at last when they were all on board but one, that one came running down the path, and before he had got half way to us the burgh was all illuminated with a rosy light, and looking up we saw that the laughing villain had fired it in twenty places, and not only the dwellings but also the great mound of fuel his friends had built against the tower door.

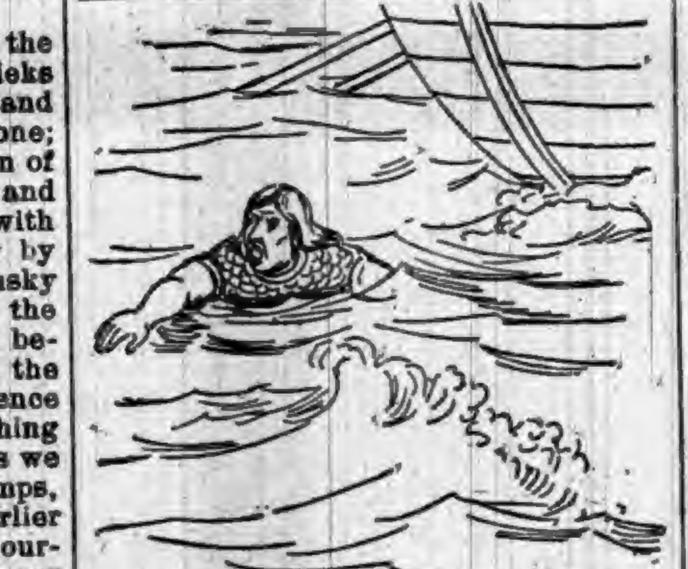
CHAPTER VII.

Up came our anchor and out we lurched upon the waves once more. We set sail and drifted slowly down under the cliff where stood the castle, and as we came the fire raged furiously until when we were below that beetling brow we were sailing on a heaving molten sea of blood, and all our spars and cordage were shining copper red, and all the upturned faces of the vikings were flushed and hectic in the shine—and then—oh, how can I write it?—just as we came the nearest a white woman's form stepped frantic out on top of the tower and clasped her hands across her eyes, and hid her face and wept. And I—oh the fiercest, strangest gust of agony and joy sprang up within my heart—I gasped and glared, and, all forgetting the strangeness of it in the horror of the moment, dropped the tiller, and leaping to the clanking bulwarks stared another moment, and then, out of my deepest heart, out of the hot inspiration of my very soul, burst a fierce, wild cry of "Gunna!"

And in an instant that white form was on her feet and staring terror-dazed at us, and then she saw me by the shrouds as I stood limned in gold, with all my ship against the black setting of the night, and gazed down steadfastly upon me for a minute, then clapped her hands upon her bosom and stretched them wildly to me, and above the hissing of the flame and the thud of the white surf upon the rocks I heard her cry, "Ulla! Ulla!"

And now the strength of twenty jarls was in my heart. I tossed off as though they were baby fingers the strong grip of two stout fellows who thought to stay me and in a minute was in the surf and striking out bravely for the land. The great frothy pillows of the tide boiled for a space under my chin, and now I was deep down in a humming black sea valley and anon mast high upon a curling crest of spume, and then, all in the black shadow of the cliff, the black waters seemed to dissolve into a hell of ghostly chaos and white thunder, and my feet touched the pebbly bottom. I landed somehow, but how only the pale Norns can tell, and scrambled up a sheep track the boldest of my men had said in daylight was impossible; came to the palisades and clambered over them, and rolled into the fort on top of two mangled bodies, and up again, and now, in the golden shine of the fire, rushed to the great hall.

There in his chair of state was the dead chief just as my robbers had left him, with mouth wide open and fixed eyes staring grimly down his hall and golden wine cup clinched within his fingers and bloody night gear wrapped about him, while on his face the streaks of pain and anger twitching with a hideous mockery of life as the smoke curled and the flames went soaring overhead in rosy eddies. To right and left was wild disorder, tables overturned and benches cast about, broken flagons and squandered victuals, bent swords and cleft targets, and costly stuffs pulled into shreds and dead men a-sprawl upon their faces, and blood and dirt and litter, and over all the fire was humming its fierce song as it mounted from point to point in the roof and shed great burning flakes and embers on us below. But nothing I cared for blood and litter, but with a foot of wind and a heart hotter than the flames above rushed through the banquet place and brushing rudely by the scowling king got out to the inner court and so reached the portal of the tower.

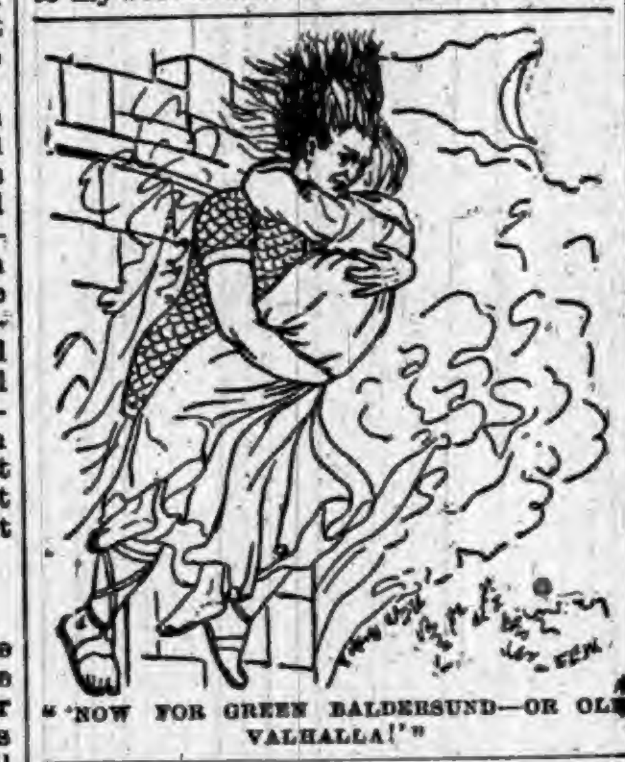


"WAS IN THE SURF AND STRIKING OUT BRAVELY."

Over a red path of cinders I flew, and with my bare hand cast the flame-rotten doorway into red ruins, and up the twining oaken steps I raced—scarce noticing that they fell to ashes as I passed—and in another moment, in a moment of wildly mingled feelings, I was out upon the burning parapet, and there upon her knees, leaning against the outer walls, and seeming asleep was the white maid whose fair face had haunted my forest path and shone upon me through the drift and reek of ten years' storm and battle.

Down I went upon one knee and, deep, strong love and gentle compunction welling up in my heart, took the maiden's head upon my shoulder and her hand in mine, and in a minute she gave a great, shivering gasp of pain and fear and opened her eyes and looked up. By sweet Skulla herself, it was nearly worth the interval of pain to see the glad light of pleasure that was lit within them as they met mine, to feel the warm clasp of her hand and to know unspoken that our hearts were one and our troth unbroken. It was a happy moment, but all too brief, for I knelt and framed the hot words of love and courage and drew her sweet, yielding form to my bosom, and rained my long garnered kisses on her dear, pale face. I felt the oaken platform whereon we stood heave and tremble, and, with a gasp, I looked about and saw the cruel flame had gnawed through every joist upon that turret, and the whole platform was crackling and blistered and hanging by a thread, while down below, hungry for its fall, was the great roaring, seething funeral of the inner tower. "Gunna!" I cried, "my own? there is but one way. Look! look! The stairs are gone, the platform rocks, and down below the courtyard is cruel hard. Gunna, my life! come—quick!—there—so—and hide your face deep down to my wolf-skin folds!" And as she fled to me and leapt into my arms I hid her face in my cloak and stepped off on to the narrow rim of cracked and ragged parapet just as the platform fell into ruins and went thundering down into the yellow and crimson caldron underneath.

For one grim minute I poised myself upon that narrow, giddy shell of blackened wall with the howling flame roaring behind and the dark vortex of the sea thundering in dim dreadfulness two hundred feet below upon the other, then—wrapping my sweet burden still closer to my bosom and muttering between my teeth, "Now for green Baldersund or old Valhalla!"—leapt bravely out into the night!



"'NOW FOR GREEN BALDERSUND—OR OLD VALHALLA!'"

This is all! This is the story of Ulla the viking, Ulla the priest. The lamp wavers to its ending—the ink is dry.

When the clansmen picked us up the maid was dead, and so was the light and the loving of Ulla. For three days we staggered back across the melancholy ridge and furrow of the black North Sea, and then we buried her here under a grassy mound by the white lip of the ocean in Baldersund. And grief, dull and abiding, sat in my heart, and none could assuage it. At last, after many years, there came one barefooted, a cross and a staff in his hands, from over seas and whispered comfort. He poured the unction of the new faith into my heart and the baptismal water on my head and bid me forget and arise anew. And I took the cowl of him, learning to read and write, and built me a hut by the green mound I loved and strove by penance and privation to do as I was bid.

But can I forget? Can the sharp thong and the mean fare purge the hot, free, loving spirit in my blood? At times it shakes off the shackles of sweet insipidness, and then I—I, old Ulla Erlingson—while the pale ghost-fire plays upon the dark summit of my mound and the black sea booms dismal in the black night distance, go out upon that dear, shrouding turf and cast myself upon my face, and tear my white hair, and mock the wild wind and waves with my still wilder grief.

Strange Applications.

The Salvation Army has in London a bureau of information where ladies may obtain servants and those in need of employment find work. It has been extraordinarily successful. During the first year 1,300 employers found servants, and 1,000 girls applied for work.

Strange applications come to the office. One lady recommended her departing servant as "clean, tidy, honest, sober, truthful, and a good worker." Wondering why maid and mistress should part under these conditions, the bureau found that terribly bad temper was the cause of separation.

"But, strangely enough," said the chief, "it happened that a lady had just applied to us for a servant with a bad temper, believing that such girls make the cleanest handmaids. So we are able to meet every requirement."

Some of the wants sent to the bureau are of a peculiar nature and oddly expressed.

"Kindly send me a girl who is a vegetarian," writes one lady, "or who is willing to become one."

"Not taller than five feet two. A girl who does not talk loud. She must not sing or laugh loud."

Neither are the servants who apply easy to please.

"Get me a place with two quiet, elderly people," said one. "I like to be alone."

"I am a good singer and a good speaker, and I want a good place," writes another.

"I have had a good education, and can play the piano."

"Please get my daughter a place, as she is unmanageable at home and has an awful temper," asks a fond and candid parent.

WE have noticed that when anyone in a crowd has a bit of scandal to relate, it is not until the speaker is through talking, and all have had their curiosity appeased, that someone says something about gossiping being so improper.

EMPLOYMENT, which Galen calls "Nature's physician," is so essential to human happiness that indolence is justly considered the mother of misery.

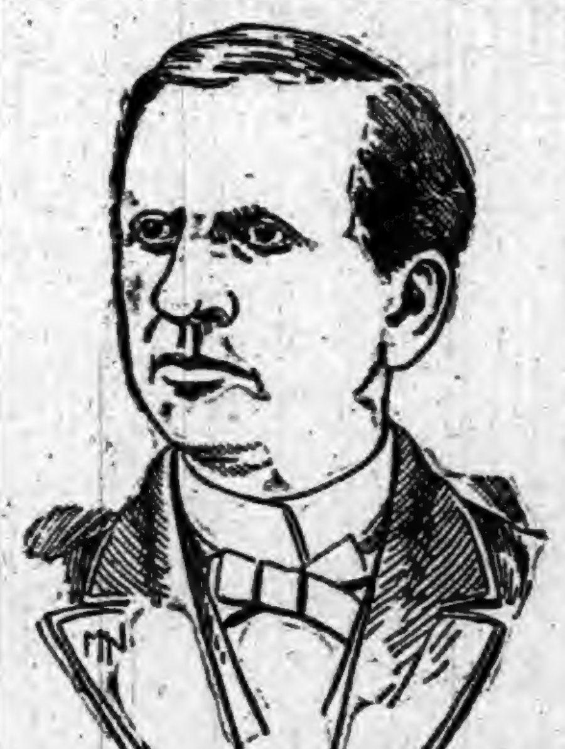
INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

JANUARY 5.—The fifty-eighth biennial session of the General Assembly of Indiana met to-day. The Senate organized by the selection of Senator Griffith as President pro tem.; Geo. S. Pleasants, Secretary; Joseph Friedman, Assistant Secretary; William T. Mannix, Doorkeeper.

The House organized by electing the following officers: James B. Curtis, Speaker; Chales E. Crawley, Clerk; John D. Carter, Assistant Clerk; B. D. L. Grazebrook, Doorkeeper. Immediately after organizing both branches adjourned until to-morrow, when the message of Gov. Chase will be read.

JANUARY 6.—The Indiana Legislature met this morning in joint session in the House chamber to hear the annual message of Gov. Chase. The message was long and read by the executive himself.

After paying tribute to the memory of Gov. Hovey, who died last February, the Governor passed directly to the important matter of state. He spoke hopefully of the new tax law and its working, saying that it had enabled the State to receive increased revenue, and that it would insure the ability of the State to pay off its debt in a short time. He thought that the debt might be paid in about eight years.



GOVERNOR CHASE.

He advocated a reduction of tax for school purposes from 16 to 11 cents, for the reason that the educational fund already has a large interest bearing surplus. He also urged the reduction of the State maintenance fund tax from 12 to 10 cents, and advised the placing of 4 per cent. of the total revenue aside for a sinking fund.

He urged additional appropriations for the World's Fair commission, and also one to the city of Indianapolis for the entertainment on behalf of the State of the G. A. R. encampment next September.

He urged as the most important subject of legislation before the General Assembly the passage of laws for the creation of better highways.

He reported the benevolent institutions progressive.

On the subject of penal legislation he urged the creation of a commission for the hearing of applications for pardons to be advisory to the executive.

After reading of the message the vote for Governor was canvassed and both houses adjourned until Monday, when the introduction of bills will begin.

The Walking Horse.

The country would reap incalculable benefit if the walk of its ordinary horses could be accelerated a single mile per hour beyond what is now general. It would put millions of dollars extra into the national pockets every year. We might have horses which would walk five miles an hour just as naturally and easily as three to three and a half, and rarely four, as is now the rule. All the farm and much of the country road and town street horsework is done at a walk. It costs no more to feed a smart walker than it does a slow, logy one, and frequently not so much. Now, let any one calculate the profit and advantage of using the former in preference to the latter. Let the farmer see how much more land per day he can get plowed and harrowed; how many more loads of hay, straw, grain and vegetables he can take to market; and how much more rapidly he is able to accomplish all his other work, and he will have little patience in keeping a slow-walking horse any longer. It will be the same with the expressman, the teamster and the truckman.

Bellfounder, got by the celebrated imported trotting horse of his name, out of Lady Allport, was not only a fast trotter, but had a natural, easy walk of five miles per hour. He was kept by our family several years, and nearly all his stock, out of quite common mares, proved excellent walkers. This shows how easily and rapidly an increased fast-walking stock may be bred by farmers, if they will only take due pains to select the stallions to which they may hereafter nick their mares. A fast-walking horse commands a considerably-higher price with those who care for the pace than a slow walker, and such buyers are constantly on the increase now, and that day will come by-and-by when a slow walker will hardly get a bid. The fastest walk that I have yet seen exactly timed and placed on record, was that of the English horse Slove. He made, without effort 5.69 miles per hour. All agricultural societies should give good premiums to fast-walking horses, the highest prize to be awarded to the one which walked five miles per hour; the second to four and one-half miles; the third to four miles. The last should be least time for which to award a prize, and all breeds should be allowed to compete.—New York Tribune.

Fire Balloon.

The Scientific American says that a fire balloon has been made, in which the lower part is constructed of asbestos cloth, while the upper part is covered with fire-proof solution. A spirit lamp is used to supply the hot air inflating it, and, being fire-proof, there is no risk, as with ordinary hot-air balloons. The system is said to be specially valuable for war balloons, as a supply of spirit can be easily carried where it would be difficult to take the appliances for preparing gas.

WORK POUCH.—Take three oval-shaped pieces of cardboard, covered and lined neatly with bright worsted or silk, and whipped together, leaving one seam open. It can only be opened by pressing on the ends. It must be larger directly in the center that anywhere else. It will hold both spool and trimming.

GORTSCHAKOFF, who was a great linguist, once said, in reply to a remark relative to his power to keep state secrets, that he knew how to hold his tongue in six languages.

BARNUM'S sanitarium at Manilla, near Shelbyville, burned, with a loss of $20,000.

THE 8-year-old son of William Rumbley, Seymour, was run over and killed by a heavy wagon.

AN association has been formed in Richmond in the interest of the friendless women of the city and county.

H. ODELL, a prominent citizen of Hobart, Lake County, 60 years old, dropped dead on the street there from apoplexy.

DR. MITCHELL, one of Muncie's pioneer and wealthy citizens, fell and broke his hip and his condition is pronounced critical.

WILLIAM HUTCHINSON, employed at the Whitely Reaper Works at Muncie, had his left arm ground off in a pair of cog-wheels.

A VALUABLE trotting horse belonging to Samuel Gaar, Richmond, was killed in a sleigh collision. The animal was valued at $500.

THE surveying corps for the proposed railroad from Kokomo to Redkey, through Fairmount, is now at work on the preliminary survey.

JOHN DREYHOBLE of Bedford, fell on the ice, receiving a bump on the head that caused concussion of the brain, and may result in death.

GEORGE AGNIELS, well known throughout the State as a breeder of fast horses, was stricken with paralysis at Princeton, and cannot recover.

HUNTING party north of Fort Wayne found the dead body of a man. A loaded gun was at his side and he had evidently frozen to death.

SOME mischief-maker placed an empty wagon on the Big Four tracks at Waldon. A passenger train dashed into it and a wreck took place. No one hurt.

BENJAMIN MOTHERAL, a well known conductor on the up-freight from Brookville, was thrown from the top of his train at Metamora, and fatally injured.

FRANK GOWAN of South Bend, employed as cook in a boarding house, became despondent and tried to kill himself with chloroform. A doctor saved him.

JAMES COX of Brazil, one of the oldest miners of Clay County, was crushed beneath a heavy fall of slate, which struck him on the head, tearing of his scalp and crushing his skull.

IT is said that the $6,000 in money belonging to Mrs. Patsy Madigan, of Terre Haute, which she had secreted in the attic, was tied up in little bundles, with rubber garters clasped around them.

PAT DONOHUGH, aged 26, a resident of Princeton, was instantly killed at Mount Carmel. He was employed as brakeman on the L. E. & St. L. While getting off his train his foot slipped and he fell under the wheels.

THE allotment of space at the World's Fair for Indiana's educational exhibit has been made, and it is far less than had been expected. Executive Commissioner Havens has received word that the space is divided as follows: Public schools, 1,900 square feet; State Normal, 300 feet; Purdue, 800; colleges, 200; Laporte kindergarten, 100; Mrs. Sewall's Indianapolis school, 150 feet.

AT Elwood, John Huston, employed by C. B. Bull, accidentally shot Bull's 11-year-old girl. Huston had returned from hunting and was climbing out of a sleigh with his shotgun, when the weapon was discharged. The contents of the gun passed through a door into an adjoining room, where five children were playing. Only one was hurt. One hundred and twenty-six shot struck the child in the thigh.

WARDEN J. W. FRENCH of the Northern Indiana Prison has tendered his report for the month of December, to the Governor. Matters at the prison for the month just closed have transpired as follows: Number of convicts in prison the first day of the month, 751; received during the month, 40; number of terms expired, 32; number pardoned, 4, remanded for new trial, 1; number of prisoners on the last day of the month, 754. Of the financial standing of the institution for the month the Warden reports receipts and earnings $10,031.59; expenditures, $8,889.25; net earnings over all expenditures, $1,134.34.

JAMES SAMUELS, brother of Giles Samuels, of Dubuque, Iowa, was for twenty-three years considered dead. He was found in the Soldiers' Home at Marion, Grant County. He was a member of the famous filibustering expedition against Cuba in 1873, and received a wound in the head which dethroned his reason. He was reported among the dead, but finally recovered, having escaped the massacre of the crew of the Virginius, following its capture. For over twenty years he has wandered about in a dazed condition, and it was only by an accident that his whereabouts were discovered. He will be taken to Dubuque and cared for by friends.

SUIT will be brought at the next term of the Circuit Court of Miami County, by Gabriel Godfrey against the Board of County Commissioners, the Treasurer and Auditor to relieve lands from the cloud upon the title consequent upon being assessed and placed upon the tax duplicate for taxation. The suit is brought on the recent decision of the Supreme Court, which declared that the Miami Indians retain their tribal relations, and are not citizens of the United States. The suit will be an important one, as most of the Indians of Miami County have until recently, been considered voters and tax-payers, and should the suit be against the County it is the forerunner of many others to follow, which means a large decrease in the County treasury.

AT Evansville a team of fire horses ran away, and the hose wagon collided with a telephone pole, breaking the wagon and throwing out three firemen. Frank Baumgartner alighted on his head on the brick pavement fracturing his skull and causing death.

AT Moore's Hill, Capt. James McKnight, 80 years old, and living alone, was found lying on his bed, with a terrible gash in his head, and dying. His room had been searched, and a large sum of money, which he was known to have in the house, was missing. He died one hour after being found without having regained consciousness.

IN the Tucker will case, at Shelbyville, which has been occupying the attention of the Shelby Circuit Court for sometime, the jury failed to agree. There were over eighty witnesses examined, and the costs already amount to over $3,000. The estate is valued at about $45,000, and was willed to last wife and her children.

THE Indiana National Banking Company of Elkhart, has been granted a charter to do business with a capital of $100,000. The officers are J. L. Broderick, President; C. B. Broderick, Vice President, and W. L. Collins, Cashier. The company has just completed a brown-stone front building, the finest in the city, in which to do business.

REMARKABLE CURES OF AUBURN AND VICINITY.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnose and wonderful cures border on that of the miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him and to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It cost nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free. A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided.

One of Auburn's most respected citizens Mr. M. N. Ward of Auburn, on the corner of Second and Jackson street, says: "I came to see Doctor Townsend four weeks ago I could hardly walk to the doctor's room without help. I have had heart disease and weak lungs and catarrh in my head for 20 years and was given up by the best physicans. I had rheumatism so my joints was so stiff I could not walk and my head hurt me so I could not rest or sleep. I was nearly deaf in right ear, but now can hear as well as I ever could. My neighbors all know how I have suffered. I can hear the clock tick in both ears, I thank God I feel well. Doctor Townsend has cured me. I have not been able to work for over one year, doctoring and taking patent medicines. I feel I am able to do two men's work now, have gained in flesh. I advise all to call on Doctor Townsend and be cured. I am willing to see any one and tell how bad I was, and let them see how well I am now.

Another respected lady of Auburn, Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson who has had a complication of diseases stomach, kidney, heart and lung disease and neuralgia pains all over, her limbs swollen so she could not step on them. She now feels nearly well, her pains have left her and her heart is well and she feels better every way.

Mr. Ward says his eye sight was so bad he could hardly see. He now feels that he could dispense with his glasses. The Doctor performed over twenty cures on his last visit. He will forfeit $5 00 for any case of catarrh he cannot cure. An eye witness to a lady who was helped to the doctor's room four weeks ago, is now doing her own work.

Miss McMillen cured of blood and skin disease of 14 years standing.

Miss L. M cured of female weakness after exhausting all medical aid.

A tape worm removed from a prominent lady on Main street after doctoring several months for stomach trouble.

Another Paper in Auburn.

In spite of repeated failures and financial losses, the business of starting new papers goes merrily on. Auburn and DeKalb county are especially chosen for these failures. For some weeks, parties have been making an active canvass for subscribers and business for a third party paper to be established at Auburn, for which purpose they have bought a share of the material of the defunct Auburn Times. Agents have canvassed various parts of the county, and quite a number have subscribed to the new venture. If a man needed a good paper, and was not already taking one, there are a number of good papers in the county for which he could subscribe, and be certain that his paper would not die out before he had used up half the money he paid. And then, in this case, why a Democrat or a Republican should pay out good money to support a paper that is kept up only to abuse the party he belongs to and break it up if possible, is more than we can understand. If the People's party want a paper of their own, and are willing to support it, that is another thing; it is to their interest perhaps. But to ask the "old parties" they hate so, to "chip in" to build them up a party organ, is a little cheeky So it is to ask merchants and other business men to support the new organ, when that organ is working to build up a party that don't believe in patronizing these same merchants,—a party that believes in buying its binder twine, coal oil and other supplies by the car load or through an agent rather than patronize a man in town. If they want the patronage of business men then let them on their part give their patronage to our home business men. If they will not do this, then let them support their own paper. Business men have a right to look to their own interests; Democrats have a right to look to their party interests, and should let all these deeply laid plans to destroy the grand old Democratic party severely alone.

Harper's Magazine.
ILLUSTRATED.

Harper's Bazar is a journal for the home. It gives the fullest and latest information about Fashions, and its numerous illustrations, Paris designs and pattern sheet supplements are indispensable alike to the home dressmaker and the professional modiste. No expense is spared to make its artistic attractiveness of the highest order. Its bright stories, amusing comedies, and thoughtful essays satisfy all tastes, and its last page is famous as a budget of wit and humor. In its weekly issue everything is included which is of interest to woman. The serials for 1893 will be written by Walter Besant and Edna Lyall. Christine Terhune Herrick will furnish a practical series, entitled "At the Toilet." Grace King, Olive Thorne Miller and Candace Wheeler will be frequent contributors. The work of women in the Columbian Exposition will be fully represented with many illustrations. T. W. Higginson, in "Woman and Men," will please a cultivated audience.

THURSDAY.......JANUARY 12, 1893.

GOV. MATHEWS was inaugurated on Monday.

THIRTY degrees below zero at St. Paul Tuesday.

FT. WAYNE wants a city charter like that of Indianapolis.

ILLINOIS now has her first democratic governor in forty years.

TOLEDO'S enterprising citizens have been stealing gas from the city.

TURPIE will be re-elected U. S. senator with no opposition. This is right.

EUGENE HALE, has been re-nominated U. S. Senator from Maine, by the republicans.

INDIANA legislature organized last Thursday. Capt. J. B. Curtis was chosen speaker.

BLAINE was still alive at last reports yesterday, though there is little or no hope for his recovery.

COLORED people are now asking to be called "Negroes" with a capital N and not "colored." That surely is sensible.

NEXT Tuesday our legislature will ballot for U. S. senator, each house by itself, but on Thursday the two bodies meet and vote jointly.

HENRY CABOT LODGE will be elected to succeed Dawes as U. S. senator from Massachusetts. He is the author of the "Force Bill" and of course, a republican.

U. S. SENATORS are being selected. F. B. Stockbride, republican succeeds himself from Michigan; F. M. Cockrell, democrat, succeeds himself in Missouri.

REPORT of the U. S. treasury shows that the public debt has been reduced not quite six millions during the year, and we have five millions less for a surplus.

ALBERT LIEBER, our democratic elector from the Indianapolis district, was selected to carry the vote of Indiana to Washington. The vote is also sent by letter.

MAN in Rockford, Ill., says he will go into a trance, June 21, and be buried in a field, and have barley sown over him, and after it has been harvested, they can dig him up, and he will come to life. This beats rainmaking. They ought to sow late barley.

MANY interesting war relics will be on exhibition at the world's fair, among them will be the old locomotive "General" the one stolen from the rebels by Union men in the famous "Andrews raid." Then there will be the real cabin occupied by "Uncle Tom," and one of the three first engines ever used on a railway.

A LARGE ocean sailing vessel, the Wyer G. Sargent, was disabled and abandoned at sea nearly two years ago, but is still afloat. It is often seen by vessels, and though its masts are all gone, it drifts helplessly wherever the winds or the tides direct its course. Of course there is danger that some ship may strike it in the night.

CHASE, the outgoing governor, in his message, advocates all kinds of expensive improvements, and at the same time wants expenses cut down. He reminds one of the average republican editor. The people, however, know that improvements cost money, and if they want improvements they must be willing to pay for them. For example, we need better roads, and can have them only by increased expense. Knowing this, if the people demand better roads and are willing to stand the cost, they ought to have them. But don't let us go into a thing that we know will cost money, and then grumble at the expense.

Important Announcement.

Through the courtesies of M. N. Pumadore, Prof. of the violin in the Conservatory of Music, Ft. Wayne, Ind., the great Musin Concert Company, in its tour through the cities of the United States, has been induced, in the interest of the Junior class of our high school here, to give us one of their marvelous entertainments. Ovide Musin, the great Belgian violinist, now of Paris, France, is considered the finest violin player living. Besides his own wonderful ability, he is supported by artists of the very highest reputation. Eduard Scharf, his piano accompanist, has no superior, having the proud distinction of receiving the "Great Moscheles Prize" as solo pianist at the Leipzig Conservatory of music. Inez Parmater, the Mezzo Soprano, the "English ballad singer" has very few equals. She possesses a heavy dramatic soprano voice of wonderful richness and sympathy, with notes as clear as a bell," and is spoken of in the very highest of terms by the press of the larger cities both of this country and the old, while Annie Louise Tanner-Musin, the Prima donna and Pier Delasco, the basso, are each remarkable in their peculiar line. Mme Tanner-Musin has a compass of three full octaves, ranging from G below the staff to G above high C and is marvelously sweet in tone. And Mr. Celasco, as a basso, has very few equals. This will be a musical treat, such as Auburn has never had before, and is not likely to have again in many a year.

Court.

Last Friday was spent, or a part at least, getting a jury to try the two young toughs, Robbins and Hensinger, for their part in the late burglaries. It was a difficult job to get suitable men, but finally it was concluded to let the regular jury have the job. So on Saturday forenoon, everything being ready to start in, and the boys brought into court and all in shape for busidess, when the United States Marshal, Moore, suddenly and quietly appeared on the scene, and demanded the prisoners, on a charge of counterfeiting. After some discussion they were given to him, and he took them on the first train to Indianapolis where they were locked up to await trial before the U. S. court. It appears that the boys had been, for some time, suspected of some such work as this, and Sheriff Ralston and Deputy Blum had been working up the case. The Sheriff had got a knowledge of the clues, and other circumstances helped to hurry up the expose. It appears among other clues, that Robbin's first wife, now divorced, had told that if he married again she would give him away. Recently he married a girl named Emberson, at Huntertown and the first wife then disclosed what had already been suspected, that Robbins had molds for making bogus coin. He and Hensinger were not aware of the discoveries, but Sheriff Ralston was hot on the trail, and having found this proof of their crime, had notified the marshal. Hence the arrest. That relieves our jail of a part of the toughest crowd it ever held, for though young in crime, the boys were a rough lot. They became so unmanageably funny in jail that the sheriff had to chain some of them to keep them in bounds. And any day if they saw a man they knew, passing by, they would assail him with such a lot of filth and insults, as would have insured them summary punishment, had they been in reach. Young Myers and Wixon were taken to Michigan City Monday, by Sheriff Ralston, and are no doubt working on their time now. It appears that young Myers might have got off, had it not been for an old sentence that was hanging over him, and which the judge would now have put in force, for it appears there was but little proof against him, except that he had gone with the gang on at least some of their raids. But under the circumstances it was as well to let him go now for the year and have it served out. We hope he will be wiser and better when he returns. Bay VanAuken, was given 90 days in jail, and Clem Holderbaum, for larceny, fined $1 and goes to jail a short term. The court is running with full head of steam on. Yesterday they were trying the case of Lower vs Stiefel. Lower wanted to recover $100 he claimed had been taken from him while drunk, after he had lost a large sum gambling.

Drs. Townsend Coming.

As seen by advertisement, these eminent Doctors will be at the Swineford House, Auburn, Jan. 4.

The diagnostic powers of these Surgeons in reading diseases without asking questions have produced a sensation among the physicians of the country. The stories patients tell of their power over disease border on the miraculous. One says: I went to them on crutches and I came home without them. Another: I had spinal curvature that doctors told me was incurable and I am now well. Another said: I was given up by fourteen doctors, who told me I had Bright's disease of the kidneys, but thanks to Drs. Townsend I am now a well man. Another: I was bedridden for over ten years with a complication of female diseases. Some of the most eminent specialists, including three professors in medical colleges, and they all told me I could not get well. Four years ago I placed my case in the hands of the Drs Townsend, and in 5 months and 4 days from the time I commenced treatment I dressed myself and walked across the room, and in another month I felt as well as I ever did in my life and have remained in excellent health ever since. Another says: I had epilepsy for fifteen years and was cured. Another: My whole nervous system was broken down and I was practically an old man at 31. I could not sleep, my hands trembled. I would get dizzy and forgetful and became so bad that I had to give up business. I consulted many doctors, the best, I thought, in the country, and finally went to Europe, and spent over $9,000 and three years' time and was no better, but gradually got worse. I returned home to die and closed up all my business affairs. At last a friend, who had been cured, advised me to go to the Drs. Townsend. Without any faith, but to please him, I went, and to my great surprise they told me they could cure me, and they made good their word, for from the first dose of medicine I commenced to improve, and in twelve months I was completely cured. A lady says: My case was pronounced to be tubercular consumption by seven of our best physicians, and under whose treatment I got worse all the time. The Drs. Townsend cured me in just four months. One says: I had catarrh that affected my head so I was almost crazy. It went into my ears, and oh! such a roaring, I was almost wild; it had gone down also upon my lungs and the doctor said it was the bronchitis. Thanks to the Drs. Townsend I am entirely well. Another says: I was cured of a bad cancer. A lady of great refinement, who had received serious injuries during a confinement, was cured after other specialists utterly failed. Thousands of cases similar to the above might be cited.

Examination by letter or in person free and sacredly confidential. If unable to see the Doctors write full particulars. Thousands treated by correspondence. Address, with stamp:

The Century Magazine in 1893.

It would be hard for a person who cares for good reading to make a better investment than a year's subscription to The Century Magazine. No region is too remote no expense too great, if it will only produce what the Century's readers want. This is the policy that has made it, as the Pall Mall Budget, of London, says: "By far the best of the magazines, English or American."

The November number begins a new volume and contains the first chapters of a powerful novel of New York society, called "Sweet Bells out of Tune," written by Mrs. Burton Harrison, the author of "The Anglomaniacs." In this story the fashionable wedding, the occupants of the boxes in the Metropolitan Opera House, the "smart set" in the country house are faithfully reflected, and the illustrations by Charles Dana Gibson, "Life's" well known cartoonist, are as brilliant as the novel.

In this November number begins also a great series of papers on "The Bible and Science," opening with "Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors," by Prof. Shields, of Princeton, who takes decided ground that the Bible does not contain scientific errors of any moment, and who most interestingly states the case from his point of view. Other articles in this series will include one in the December (Christmas) number, "The Effect of Scientific Study upon Religious Beliefs."

An important series of letters that passed between General Sherman and his brother Senator John Sherman are also printed in November, which number contains also contributions from the most distinguished writers, including an article by James Russell Lowell, which was not quite completed at the time of his death. The suggestion which Bishop Potter makes in the November Century as to what could be done with the World's Fair if it were opened on Sunday, is one which seems the most practical solution of the problem yet offered.

The December Century was a great Christmas number,—full of Christmas stories, Christmas poems, and Christmas pictures,—and in it began the first chapters of a striking novel of life in Colorado, "Benefits Forgot," by Wolcott Balestier, who wrote "The Naulahka" with Rudyard Kipling.

Papers on good roads, the new educational methods, and city government are soon to come. Four dollars will bring you this splendid magazine for one year, and certainly no cultivated home can afford to be without it. Subscribers can remit directly to the publishers, The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York. They should begin with November, and so get first chapters of all the serials, including "Sweet Bells out of Tune."

The establishment of a Keeley Cure in Auburn, reminds us of an occurrence that recently took place in Vermont. Two men were brought before the court for being drunk. It was the third offense, and the laws there make the third offense of this kind punishable by two months in jail, at hard work, and a fine of $20. The men began to realize the gravity of their case, when the judge sentenced them, and then proposed that they would go and take a course of the Keeley treatment, and if it cured them they were to go free. If they failed to give the course a fair trial, or it did not cure them, then the judge was to see that the punishment provided by law should be carried out. This novel offer was accepted, and the men are probably cured by this time. They will find it better than going to jail.
